These came a number of prominent citizens and visitors followed by a carriage containing the colored servants of the Governor's Mausoleum.

Services at the Grave.

The services at the grave were short and of the simplest character. Dr. Watkins offered a fervent prayer after which the Masons and Odd Fellows each dropped the sprig of acacia in the grave with abbreviated ceremonies. Three guns were discharged by the Durham Light Infantry after "earth to earth" fell upon the coffin and the sorrowing relatives had quitted what to them is now holy ground. The large procession and the concurrence of people turned their faces to the city.

The Floral Offerings.

Many ladies who had known him and loved him stood by and were, "like Niobe, all tears." They made the grave a lovely bed of beautiful flowers, placing the floral offerings most tastefully upon the fresh earth.

A Great Procession.

The oldest citizens had never before seen a funeral procession of such magnitude in Raleigh. It was an imposing yet sorrowful sight. The hearse tastefully draped and horses in their mourning dress, the low rattle of sixteen muffled drums, the steady tread of near three hundred soldiers, each with mourning badge, banners and flags draped in black, buildings wrapt in their dark dress and the whole scene a scene of sorrow which could hold back the tears that forced themselves in many an eye.

From the time the cortege left the church to the time when it approached the gate of Oakwood Cemetery exactly one-half hour elapsed. The procession was over a mile in length.

The Greatest Funeral Held in Raleigh.

It is estimated that fully ten thousand people viewed and took part in this, the saddest occasion that has yet taken place in Raleigh. Old citizens say that on the death of no distinguished son has North Carolina done greater honor than she did to the lamented Daniel G. Fowle.

The Governor's Staff Retained.

Gov. Thomas M. Holt, after the return of the procession to the city, called in the Governor's staff to his office, and after making a short address to them, re-appointed them as members of his staff during the remainder of the administration.

Gov. Holt has retained private Secretary Telfair and Executive Clerk Capehart.

Governor Fowle's Administration.

Editorially, the same day, the Chronicle said:

In his inaugural address on the 17th of January, 1890, the late Governor Fowle, after reviewing the history of his predecessor, felicitated the people upon the great fact that the "issues of the war were dead."

"Before Mr. Cleveland's administration," said the Governor, "there were those narrow-minded men of the North who honestly believed—if narrow-mindedness can well be honest"—that the success of the Democratic party would mean an assault upon the recently acquired rights of the colored men. "But," continued the Governor, "as the sun when he has climbed above the horizon, by his dispelling beams drives away the fogs which obscured the vision, so the glorious acts of Cleveland's administration have shamed into silence the stupid croakers of the North and allayed the fears of the credulous and white-minded negroes of the South." He then went on to proclaim the devotion of the people of North Carolina to the National Government, and to inculcate a lesson of patriotism in every North Carolina heart.

The national patriotism—this lofty ideal of citizenship—this devotion to the constitution and constitutional government was the distinguishing characteristic of Governor Fowle's career. From the day the Southern soldiers, of whom he was one, laid down their arms, his highest ambition was to live to see the day when the people of the South should recover their proud position among the sister States, and to find in every heart a feeling of love and pride for the flag of the American Union, himself loved the stars and stripes with increasing devotion as he grew in years, and believed American citizenship was "the greatest honor which any human being can claim." Akin to his love of the flag was his faith in the constitution, and his belief that our liberties were only safe when the people jealously guarded their constitutional rights. His resignation as a Superior Court Judge, rather than obey the mandates of military satraps, was the strongest evidence of his devotion to the American Union, and regard for constitutional government that he rarely made a speech that he did not emphasize the importance of a more lofty patriotism and a higher appreciation of our constitutional rights. In the light of the tendency towards centralization, which is the greatest menace of our liberties, his word upon word, and precept were invaluable in teaching the lesson he sought to impart. It was a great lesson—one that none of us can learn too thoroughly, and one which, in view of the slippery way in which superficial people refer to constitutional limitations, was an essential part of wise instruction as well as progressive statesmanship.

In his inaugural address, Governor Fowle laid particular stress upon four important matters of State interest which he was permitted to see accomplished.

1st. He advocated an increased term for the public schools. As he went about the State he urged upon the people the necessity of an enlarged appropriation for this purpose. We heard him at Wake Forest in 1889 make a plea for better public schools which was one of the most eloquent efforts of his life. He said that if he could see the schools of the State improved and every boy and girl given a chance to secure an education he would feel that the greatest good to the State had been secured. In his message to the Legislature in January he repeated this recommendation, and was gratified in the progressive action of the Legislature. He also lived to see enlarged appropriations for A. & M. College and the University which he earnestly advocated. In his last message, he laid emphasis upon the necessity of providing instruction for the women of the State and showed its importance. At the adjournment of the Legislature nothing gratified him more than the educational progress made.

2. In his inaugural address, and in his messages to the Legislature, he congratulated the people of the State upon the increased railroad building that was blessing the State, and insisted upon State Regulation by a wise and conservative Railroad Commission. He lived to see his recommendation acted upon, and the Commissioners elected.

3. In his inaugural address, he advocated a Home for the disabled soldiers of the State and repeated his recommendation in his messages. He lived to see this Home opened, and a generous people will bless him for his efforts in securing it.

4. The plan of making the penitentiary self-supporting was the first practical measure that demanded the consideration of the Governor. He went into the chair firmly convinced that this institution ought to be self-supporting. In the composition of the Board of Directors and in the messages to the General Assembly he made this a leading policy of this administration, and from the day he went into office until the moment of his death the realization of this end was foremost in his mind. He lived to see this practically accomplished, though not put upon so sure a basis of self-support as he felt would be secured before the expiration of his term of office. His labors in this direction, as well as in the management of other public institutions, surprised those who supposed that the chief talent of the Governor was in the direction of eloquent speeches rather than practical business. He gave every evidence of a practical dollar and cents wisdom, and gratified his friends and pleased those who had expected that he would make a practical Governor.

We have referred to those four objects that were dear to the Governor's heart because they illustrate the character of his administration. Without education, there is no hope for future greatness, and the administration of Governor Fowle witnessed more progress along educational lines than any ten years in the history of the State. Without railroads, which are the arteries of trade and commerce, the State cannot grow rich and prosperous. The administration of Governor Fowle witnessed the construction of more miles of railroad in the State than were ever built in any two years of the State's history. It also witnessed the establishment of a Railroad Commission, and at his suggestion care was taken "not to interfere with the legitimate exercise of power by the different railroad corporations, but at the same time the interests of the State should be carefully guarded against usurpations by these most powerful associations." Without a Home for our disabled soldiers, the State could not adequately express its gratitude for the distinguished services of the brave men who went to the front. Governor Fowle lived to see this gratitude expressed.

We have not space in detail to refer to his wise and conscientious exercise of the highest prerogative—the pardoning power. He tempered justice with mercy, and sought to do what equity would dictate. Neither can we more than touch upon his use of the appointing power. Mistakes he doubtless did make, but in the main his appointments have been deserving of all commendation. The Governor's greatest weakness was in the implicit trust which he placed in his friends. If he made mistakes it was because he trusted too largely to the virtue and wisdom of his friends.

There was no back door to the administration. No one or a dozen friends could influence him to do an impure action. He acted usually upon his own judgment and when he erred it was because his heart caused him to lean too strongly upon those he loved. He was absolutely incorruptible, conscientious, frank and sincere. He often said that the responsibilities of the office weighed heavily upon him, and we know that he sought to serve the people with fidelity, ability and an eye single to the good of the State.

The verdict of history will be that no administration in the history of the State has been more progressive or honorable; none has been freer from outside influence; and none has been more patriotic.

The State has lost a brilliant and patriotic Chief Executive, and it is fitting that every honor should be paid to his memory.

The Governatorial Succession.

The death of Gov. Fowle and the succession of Lieut. Gov. Holt raises the question of the gubernatorial succession.

Section 12, Art. III, of the State Constitution provides, among other things, that when the Lieutenant Governor shall be unable to preside over the Senate, the Senators shall elect one of their own number President of their body, and he shall become Governor whenever the Lieutenant Governor shall, for any reason, be prevented from discharging the duties of Governor (where the office devolves upon him). Whenever, during the recess of the Legislature, it shall become necessary for the President of the Senate to administer the government, the Secretary of State shall convene the Senate that they may elect such President.

Unless a special session of the Senate is called, there will be no election of a President until January, 1891. In the event that Gov. Holt, for any cause, could not discharge the duties of Governor, it would be incumbent on the Secretary of State to convene the Senate so that it may elect a Lt. Governor who would then discharge the duties of Governor.

The Springs Medicine.

The popularity which Hood's Sarsaparilla has gained as a spring medicine is wonderful. It possesses just those elements of health giving, blood-purifying and appetite-restoring which everybody seems to need at this season. Do not continue in a dull, tired, unsatisfactory condition when you may be so much benefited by Hood's Sarsaparilla. It purifies the blood and makes the weak strong.

Don't Be Gloomy.

Those who are the victims of mercurial poisoning, or who are suffering from mercurial rheumatism, are inclined to take a gloomy view of life when, as the poet says, "Winter is folding its white tents and spring getting its thunderstorms together." Yet these victims have no reason to despair.

S. S. S. is a sure remedy for all forms of mercurial poisoning. Though it is purely a vegetable medicine, it is powerful, indeed, when called on to chase mercury, and the last lingering effects of mercury, out of the system. It performs the work with neatness and dispatch, as thousands of testimonials show.

Conoho is the name of the junction town of the Scotland Neck and Albemarle and Raleigh Railroad.

Dr. L. A. Guild, Atlanta, Ga. writes: "Wm. Sealock, living on my place, had an ugly running ulcer on his arm which ordinary remedies failed to control. As a last resort I placed him on a use of B. B. B. and the ulcer began to heal at once, and effected an entire cure. It is a remedy well worthy of confidence."

If you decide, from what you have heard or read, that you will take Hood's Sarsaparilla, do not be induced to buy any substitute instead.

ROCKY MOUNT,	Tuesday, April 7th.
NASHVILLE,	Thursday, April 9th.
TARBORO,	Tuesday, April 14th.

Come Out, Tobacco Farmers,

And be convinced that this Machine will set plants better than it can be done by hand, and will insure a stand when the land is dry. Mr. Perry Renfrow and Dr. H. B. Lucas have each bought one of these Transplanters from me this season. Both of these gentlemen saw mine at work last season, and are convinced, apart from economy, that better work can be done with this machine than by hand. Write for circulars, testimonials, etc.
