JUSTICE IN TEXAS.

A Homemade Judge Who Overruled the United States Supreme Court. Western judges have been the butt of many jokes and yarns, and while the stories have made interesting reading mind. Such was the idea I entertained the honored upholders of justice, but a short acquaintance with some of their absurd constructions of the law has dissipated any misgivings I had in regard to the truth and veracity of the scribes. In 1896 there was a body of United States soldiers at Fort Concho in Tom Green county, Tex., and as a natural consequence a small town had sprung up just across the river. San Augelo was not a place of much importance at first, they tell everybody what a delightful a train and go through it and put the first they had and what a charming family and what good cooking and head and keep it there until he dishead and kee necessity as their food, and the use of it as common as that of a knife and fork. Shooting scrapes needed no court to settle them. They settled themselves. Horse thieves received no mercy. But Pulseless heart of the little one—
I looked upon the devoted father and mother,
He so brave and noble, she so full of love, contrary to law." The little judge raced up in his chair, and, bringing his fist down with considerable emphasis replied: "Tam the law! It's justice vat we want!" and the case was settled. Numerous stories might be told concerning his ruling in different caseshow, after fining a man for disorderly conduct, he paid the fine himself and gave the prisoner money enough to get to El Paso. On one occasion two bellig-Fell on me; and an infant cherub erents were up before him for fighting, one with his head chopped open with a As springs a sunbeam into the heart of I hatchet, and the other minus an ear and his nose held in place with a strip of eider of you vellers cooms up pefore m again I'll gif you a veek in jail." Ther he made them shake hands and invited the principals in the case and witnesse to drink at his expense. One day the settlement was startle by the report that a young lawyer had come to live there, and there was great rustling to see who would give him the ents about the ownership of a saddle nd then shook dice to see who would have the lawyer. When the case was called the courtroom was crowded, the judge behind his desk looking more solemn than usual, and the hawyer, a young sprig straight from an eastern law school, with an uneasy look on his face and a pile of lawbooks, occupied a table at one side. There were many witnesses to examine, for everybody wanted a finter in the pie, and when the evidence was all in the lawyer made quite an elequent plea and clinched his arguments by reading the decision of the United States supreme court in a parallel case As he sat down with a confident smile the defendant were an air of defeat, but the little judge arose with an air of judicial authority that would have stricken
