The agent at Ellenville remembered that the two men had bought tickets for a point about 20 miles away. The fact that it was in the direction of New York caused Manson some uneasiness, for his fear was that they might elude him by going straight to the metropolis and sailing for Europe. He decided that if he should find they had gone directly to the city he would telegraph to Chief Varick and set him at work.

Leaving the train at the point indicated, he quickly gained tidings of the fellows. They had left the town only two days before, still proceeding in the direction of New York. It was past 11 o'clock when the detective stepped upon the platform at Wingfield, which, as far as he could tell wit a the aid of the moonlight and a few oil lamps, was of about the same size as Ellenville, and, like that primitive town, contained but a single house for the entertainment of man and beast. point, for a single glance was sufficient to identify hem, with their swarthy skins, their jet black hair and eyes, their white, glassy teeth and their half oriental garb. They were seated in chairs in one cor-

Naturally they glanced up at Manson as he came in, and nodding to them as well as the landlord he registered and stated that he would probably spend several days in the village It was a vast relief to the detective to find that he had run down the couple in such a brief time and with comparative ly little trouble. He fully believed that one of them at that moment had the rajah's ruby about his garments, for it was not to be supposed that after once getting their hands on it they would take the risk of forwarding it to India, or indeed of allowing it to pass out of their possession unless compelled as a matter of precaution to take the step. Quite confident on this point, the struggle, as the detective now viewed it, narrowed down to a conflict of wit and cunning between him and these swarthy miscreants, who had traveled so many thousand miles to commit the robbery. His theory, as intimated elsewhere. was that the fellows arriving in Ellenville had carefully looked over the ground and decided that the safer course for them was to bribe Dr. Maidhoff to secure the gem for them. Doubtless they came prepared to pay a large price, for it could not have been the intrinsic value of the ruby, great as it was, which gave it such worth in the eyes of the descendant of its first owners. The physician had secured the prize, as he could readily do, and the detective was inclined to suspect that he had not hesitated at the crime of murder in order to carry out his part of the bargain. He had received the wages of his treachery. and the messengers of evil were making their way homeward with the priceless jewel and doing so with a deliberation that they might well believe would ward

Manson sat down for a brief talk with the landlord before retiring for the night. He apparently bestowed little other impurities and builds up every attention on the fellows in the corner, to make a preliminary survey of the ground, as may be said.

On their part they seemed to feel no interest in him, but every time he stole a glance at he dusky countenances, with their red felt skull caps, from which gilt tassels dangled, he encountered those snaky eyes which instantly flitted their looks in another direction. "It is impossible that they should suspect me," was his conclusion, "any more than they may suspect all strangers. I am sure they are fully armed, and the couple will be dangerous to attack. They continued conversing with considerable animation, being free with their gestures and apparently deeply interested in what each was saying. "If I only understood Hindoostani," thought Manson, "I might be able to pick up a valuable pointer or two, for they must feel free to talk their lingo before any people besides their own." Suddenly they rose, and one of them said to the landlord in fair English: "We go to bed, please."

"All right," he replied, with a yawn, It is found by experience that this glad to find that he was about to gain apparatus collects the electricity the sleep for which he was yearning. "I'll be back with you in a minute," added, addressing Manson, who nodded and said he was ready also to retire. LIKE A NEW MAN owell Grocer Debilitated by overwork, makes use of AYER'S Sarsaparilla and soon feels Strong and Well.

"A year ago, my partner died, and the whole burden and responsibility of a large grocery business fell upon me. The increased care and hard work, in connection with the low state of my blood, so severely taxed my strength that I became all run down, had no appetite, was weak, nervous, and endured all the torments which headache, indigestion, general debility, and total loss of energy could possibly inflict. The medicine recommended me by my physicians did no more good than so much water. AYER'S Sarsaparilla being favorably brought to my attention, I tried it, and, in a short time, began to feel better. I continued to take this medicine for two months, at the end of which time I felt like a new man. My appetite, energy, and strength returned, my food digested perfectly, and all traces of headache and nervousness disappeared. I am convinced that if I had not taken AYER'S Sarsaparilla, instead of being strong and well, when the warm weather set in, I should have been confined to my bed, under the doctor's care, and totally unable to attend to business. I am a thorough believer in the merits of AYER'S Sarsaparilla for restoring to healthy, vigorous action, the vital organs of the body, when they have become weakened or exhausted."-WILLIAM H.
