TRUE FRIENDSHIP.

BY DAVID B. METCALF. I never will forsake thee, Though darkness and way shroud with gloom thy pathway In life's journey below; Though friends may prove false When fortune doth frown, One heart shall prove true To the soul that's cast down.

MR. AND MRS. PAOLO.

BY MARY KYLE DALLAS.

Every since Mr. and Mrs. Paolo had been married they had been in the habit of taking a Sunday afternoon walk together. They were not fashionable people, for they only kept a little shop for the sale of confectionery and small fire-works.

"This is what they have told me marriage brought upon a man," said Mr. Paolo. "Mother always said that husbands generally ill-used their wives after they had been married a year," said Mrs. Paolo to herself.

Meanwhile Mr. Paolo had come to the conclusion that in no way could he so punish little Mrs. Paolo as by going out alone to take his Sunday walk. Consequently he put on his hat and took very quietly out of the door through which his wife had slipped a little while before.

At last Mr. Paolo, like his wife, remembered the pretty park where he had made love to her, and went thither; he sat down on the old bench under the old tree, and rested his head against it.

MR. AND MRS. JOHNSTON.

[From the New York Times]

Of the numerous eminent citizens of Oshkosh, there is none who is more deserving of respect than Mr. Johnston. Not only is he an amiable and upright man, but he is gifted with remarkable inventive genius.

THE CHARM OF A SOFT FEMALE VOICE.

Yes, we agree with that he was a young man and a modern poet who said that a low, soft voice was an excellent thing in woman.

A VERITABLE FISH-STORY.

Mr. Johnston's voyage from the Washington to New York, when the ship-typhoon broke out among the crew. One of the sailors among the first victims was accompanied by his son, a lad of 14 years.

After lingering a few days the sailor died. As was the custom at sea, he was sewed up in a blanket and for the purpose of making him an old grudge and a carpenter's axe were put in with him.
