THE ROANOKE NEWS.

THURSDAY, AUGUST 14, 1879.

THIS is the best time of the year to repair public roads. The overseers have every facility for putting them in order. If they do not, they are liable to indictment.

EVERY body should aid the county board of health in improving the sanitary condition of the people. The physicians especially should render every assistance possible.

WE hope the grand juries of all our courts will take upon themselves, to enforce the law in regard to concealed weapons. The practice should be stopped and it is their duty to do so. Magistrates too, should enforce the law wherever it is in their power.

THE time for selecting officers for the Inferior court is only two weeks off. The best men should be elected, and we hope the magistrates will be prepared to do their duty, and elect such as will conduct the business of the court impartially, economically and conscientiously.

EDENTON at last has a telegraphic communication with Norfolk. The first messages were from Mayor Pruden to the Governor, sending greeting and an answer from the Governor congratulating the town. Now if the telegraph line can be followed up with a railroad Edenton and the Eastern counties will be blessed indeed. That is a fine country and only needs quick transportation.

MAJOR JNO. W. MOORE, author of Moore's school history of North Carolina has for sometime been busily engaged on his large history. He has made arrangements for the printing of the work which will be ready sometime in October. North Carolina has been in need of a full and complete work of the kind for a long time and we hope a copy of Major Moore's book will be found in every household in the State. It is time our people should know something of our history, and should also teach others a little about it. Nothing helps on to greatness so much as to look back on the greatness of our ancestors.

On last Saturday Senator Conkling and ex-Gov. Sprague of Rhode Island came near having a personal difficulty. It seems that the two have differed on some political questions. Senator Conkling paid a friendly visit to Mr. Sprague's home when the latter was away. Sprague found Conkling there on his return. Sprague has been much excited for several days on account of some railroad business, and on seeing Conkling abused him roundly. Conkling forebore to reply. Mr. Sprague thereupon produced a pistol and told Conkling unless he left in a given time he would blow his brains out. It is supposed that a challenge will be sent. All of this can happen at the North and nothing is said. It is all right. But as soon as a Southern gentleman wishes to resent an insult the bloody-shirt is waved, and the "plantation manners" of the people harped on as if the North never did anything wrong. We are surprised that Mr. Sprague hasn't shot Conkling before this.

In the counties of Clay and Cherokee the mormons have begun to multiply to an extent which was agreeable to them but not satisfactory to good people of those counties. The people rose up and threatened to make it warm for them if they did not leave, giving them thirty days in which to get beyond the State boundaries. One of the Elders asked protection from Governor Jarvis who instructed the solicitor to see that the laws are preserved and the public peace is not broken. Every one of them should be indicted and punished if they have disregarded the law by marrying more that one woman. If they can live in Utah by permission of the National government, it is no reason why the State should allow them to break up society and ruin morals by their acts. Wherever a mormon settlement is made in this State, let the people of the community send them away. One wife is enough for any man and sometimes too many.

LEGAL ADVERTISING.

The Raleigh Observer says:

"About the propriety of publishing legal advertisement in newspapers we think there can be little or no doubt. The requirements of the law to post certain notices at three or four public places in a county can be easily complied with and still not a tithe of the proper publicity be given to their contents.

"The time has gone by when business men, or any other sort of men, for that matter, look for information as to things to buy or things to sell anywhere else than in the columns of the newspapers. To say the least of it, whether designedly so or not, a notice containing a few lines written in pale ink, or a scrap of paper stuck up at the courthouse, and three more at as many cross roads in any county, leave the great mass of the people there entirely ignorant of what is to be done, whereas the object of posting such notices is, in theory at least, to give them timely warning. And this warning is intended not merely for the benefit of the people at large, but for that of parties immediately interested as well. Certainly if by process of law a man's property is taken from him and sold away from him the law ought to see to it that every reasonable precaution is taken to make it bring its full value, that is to say, unless consideration for the debtors is no part of the duty of the law or its makers, but only consideration for creditors and the ring of greedy graibbers who interest every country, making it their regular business to attend all sales, rain, hail, or shine, and gobble up property.

"The fact is that times change and we change with them, and so ought the laws when it becomes necessary. The object of the law has always been to give publicity to legal sales, but methods that were adequate to that end two hundred years ago are not at all so now. When there were no newspapers and when the only means of sending information through a county was by public proclamation at the court house during court week, and posting written notices in public places, there was reason in the present law, for it was to just such sources that men looked for information; now, however, they no longer look to them, and there is no maxim of the law founded upon sounder principle than that which declares that 'the reason of the law ceasing, the law itself ought to cease.'

"The great trouble, we apprehend, however, grows not out of any doubt as to the propriety of using the new methods to give the desired publication to notices of legal sales, on the part of legislators but out of fear that any action in that direction on their part will appear to be in the interest of the newspapers, and draw down upon their devoted heads a certain amount of popular clamor. If the thing could only have been done without seeming to do the newspapers some benefit thereby, it would have been done long ago in every State in the Union.

"And just right there is the rub, for it is through the columns of the newspapers only that in these modern times the desired publicity can be given in regard to the legal sales just as it can there only be given in regard to other sales. In other matters the much has long since been achieved and men, as a matter of course go to the newspapers when they desire information the people as to anything they have to sell or to buy as the quickest, surest and cheapest means of accomplishing their purpose. Indeed the first thought of a man who wishes to keep a matter secret, is how he shall keep it out of the papers. It is in the matter of legal advertisements alone, we believe, that the methods of a century are deemed sufficient, which is just about as sensible as expecting a grown man to wear a jacket that fitted him when a small boy.

"The time will come, however, in all the States as it has already come in some, when legal advertisements will be required by law to be printed in newspapers, and we hope it will come soon in North Carolina, at least; not, however, because of benefit real or imaginary, that it promises to be to newspapers, but because we honestly believe the requirement is the only adequate means to insure justice to property from one person to another by process of law."

SPRAGUE AND CONKLING.

The New York World gives another version of the affair, and after declaring that the trouble "arose not between any professor of German and ex-Gov. Sprague, but between ex-Gov. Sprague and Senator Conkling," proceeds as follows:

"Either on Wednesday night or Thursday morning Senator Conkling arrived at Narragansett Pier. With him or after him came a trunk and a large valise. These articles of baggage were taken to the Sprague mansion by the direction of Senator Conkling. He remained there as a visitor the next day, and was on a hotel piazza during the next evening conversing with some ladies. During Friday afternoon Gov. Sprague was observed driving about Narragansett Pier, having been at home entertaining his guests the night previous though he had been absent for a day or two before. He had a gun with him. It is believed that he loaded earlier in day. Finally he drove to the rear of his house, which is about a mile and a half from the Pier, and came through the house in a somewhat excited condition. He got out to the piazza, where he found Senator Conkling conversing with Mrs. Sprague, who was at a window. Gov. Sprague then said addressing Senator Conkling, 'Are you armed, sir?' and Conkling replied: 'No, I am not.' 'Then,' said ex-Gov. Sprague, 'I give you five minutes to get off these premises. If you are not away I will fire at at you.' Ex-Gov. Sprague is said then to have made use of some further exasperating language. Senator Conkling, seeming much surprised but remembering that he was under ex-Gov. Sprague's roof rose and walked a few steps away while Mrs. Sprague came out of the house and stood between them. Ex-Gov. Sprague stood looking at Senator Conkling while a carriage drove up which had been ordered to take Mrs. Sprague for a drive. When Mrs. Sprague found that ex-Gov. Sprague apparently determined on an unpleasant scene she called for her hat and shawl, which Mrs Martin, a friend and guest in the house, brought her.

"After ex-Gov. Sprague repeated his peremptory order to Mr. Conkling to quit his house there was some hesitancy on the part of the New York Senator as to what should be done, but seeing no hope of a rational solution he finally took his hat, and entering the carriage, went down to the Pier, stopping on the way at Billington's restaurant. Scarcely had he arrived there and got out of the conveyance than ex-Gov. Sprague, who had followed, came up, and it is therefore certain that the latter must have kept his horse hitched up ready for use to follow Senator Conkling. On the arrival of ex-Gov. Sprague at Billington's another exchange of words took place. Stated down the foregoing are the principal facts in the case, so far as Mr. Conkling and Mr. Sprague are concerned. As to the alleged cause of the hostility of Mr. Sprague to Mr. Conkling, it is only certain that the German teacher so indiscreetly and foolishly brought into the matter, had nothing whatever to do with it. On Thursday night, according to ex-Gov. Sprague himself, he could not sleep. He said to a tradesman the next day that his mind was troubled; that he could get no rest, and that some one had to be cleared out of his house that Friday night. His movements during Friday morning were noticed by a good many people as being very strange, but no one thought that he contemplated personal injury towards any individual. After the encounter Mrs. Sprague went to Mr. Perry's near by, and subsequently to the Tower House, where it is understood she remained overnight. Thereafter she gave orders to have her trunks packed at the ex-Governor's house and put on the train for Providence. She sent her children and maid to the depot nearest the Tower Hill House and said she would take the cars at the Narragansett Pier depot, which she subsequently did, and met her family higher up the line. Before her departure from Providence, however, Mrs. Sprague went to the Lake Side House, near Silver Lake. She drove there and called out Professor Links, who is the German teacher towards whom Senator Sprague is said to feel such a pronounced antipathy. She exchanged a few words with him, which may have given rise to the introduction of his name into the story. Soon afterwards Mrs. Sprague went to the Pier depot for Providence. Ex-Gov. Sprague went to Providence Saturday, but he did not see his wife, going on a different train. That ex-Senator and Mrs. Sprague have been on most unhappy terms for some time is matter of general notoriety here. A few weeks ago a gentleman whose family are staying at Narragansett Pier called on Mrs. Sprague, and seeing in his card, saw her. He had known her for many years, but had never met her husband. He suggested to Mrs. Sprague that he would like to leave a card for the ex-Senator personally, as he desired to have the pleasure of meeting him. Mrs. Sprague in reply, said that she was quite unable to answer for anything that Mr. Sprague might think or do. She had taken no responsibility for his conduct for a long time, and it was not likely she could long remain in the same house with him."

SENATOR CONKLING HOUSEHOLD.

A dispatch from Utica, N. Y. says:

"The publication here of the Associated Press telegram relative to the trouble in ex-Gov. Sprague's household, at Narragansett Pier, R. I., on Friday afternoon, again revived the reports current here last June. It was then asserted that Mrs. Conkling was to institute divorce proceedings against her husband; that a separation had already taken place, and that the Senator would not again return to Utica. The Sun's denial of these stories early in July was given editorial prominence in the Utica Observer, and for the time being it killed the scandal, particularly as it was followed almost immediately by the Senator's return to this city. It may be again stated that Mrs Conkling will institute no divorce proceedings. All stories to the effect that there is a rupture in the Senator's home relations are unfounded. The scandals or slanders from the outside have not broken the peace of his household This is authentic."

It does not destroy the draft. It does not interfere with cleaning the tubes. It will not choke up, and requires no cleaning.

It requires no direct dampers to be opened when raising steam (dampers being objectionable as they may be left open and allow sparks to escape.)

It requires no water to extinguish sparks, which, by condensation destroys the draft. Besides, when water is used, neglected, the efficiency is destroyed by evaporation of the water, and the boiler kept in a leaky condition.

It is simple and durable and can be relied upon. It can be attached to any engine. No planter should be without one. Insurance companies will insure gin houses where the Talbott Engines and Spark-Arresters are used at same rate as gin houses, or water or horse-power.
