

THE YEARS PASS ON.

"When I was a young girl, I used to think I'd be a great and successful artist."

"When I'm a woman, I'll have a fine home to look after and my own children."

"When I'm a woman, I'll have a fine home to look after and my own children."

"When I'm a woman, I'll have a fine home to look after and my own children."

A REVERIE.

Approved by beautiful days, falling leaves, moonlight nights, and dreams.

October days are beautiful and they are sweet. The bright, crisp atmosphere is exhilarating.

The few days past have been typical Indian summer weather. A fine haze, but clear, and enjoyable.

Not only the days but the evenings have been very attractive of late. A bright, full, glowing moon has hung in the sky.

But there are those who, with Bryant, believe that:

"To him who in the hour of nature's life, communion with her yields him, she speaks a various language."

At the period, then, the early dawn, it is a sweet and soft and golden glow.

"I love to wander through the woodlands, busy, in the soft light of dawn, and see the leaves in their green and gold."

"How, through some leafy path, the sunbeams stream, and through the golden haze, the birds are seen."

"Kissing the fair-talented of the forest, the light of the clouds of Autumn's smiling face."

With heavy perfume the atmosphere is fragrant. Warm lights are on the changing tints of the leaves.

Retains soft colors along the horizon, and in the distance, through the trees, the sun is seen.

One wanders on by hand and voice, and the path is lit by the glow of the leaves.

And now, when comes the calm, mild day, as if the sun had been hidden, and the air is clear.

The south wind searches for the flowers whose fragrance is to be found.

These are a few thoughts which induce the poet to walk through the wood, with a feeling of peace.

But a few weeks ago the leaves were falling in every direction, and the air was full of their fragrance.

"Ephemeral joys! What intricate beauty for which a word of thought would furnish scope!"

"Ephemeral joys! What intricate beauty for which a word of thought would furnish scope!"
