I THINK OF THEE.

BY CARINE. When crimson morning trails her robe of glory, Across the splendid chambers of the east think of one whose smile illumes my pathway, Like sunbeams o'er the shadowed hill tops case

When full mountide lights every vale and meadow And mirth rings out on every passing breeze sigh to think we'll sit no more together. 'Mid scenes as bright and besuifful as these. Then night's soft step brings domber to the wear;

And bids the laborer be glad again , To think of rest; no joy comes to my spirit, For I must ever look for thee in vain

At morning, noon, and night, my heart turns To happy hours I spent, so long ago, With thee, while years erecp on I feel, my darling Those were the best that I shall ever know.
