A DREAM OF THE STAR-

A BEAUTIFUL THOUGHT FROM ONE OF CHAS, DICKENS WORKS.

Once upon a time, there was a little boy, and a little girl, who was his sister. Their devotion to each other was wonderful, each sharing the joys and sorrows of the other. Like all other children they asked many questions, and when they were alone, were always wondering down upon them. They wondered where the gentle rivers went, on whose backs they gamboled. Indeed they lived as it were in wonder-land. As they came home in the twilight they would talk to each little star, as it peoped timidly out to see if all was ready for its coming. They wondered if all things would be sorry if they were to die. "Surely they would," they said, for the buds are the children of flowers; the waves are the children of the sea, the little rills that flow on on with thier merry ripple, are the children of the rivers, and the little twinkling stars are the children of the blue sky. Now if we the children of men were to die, surely all these other children would miss us."-Among all the stars, one brighter than the others was a favorite of the two little children. At night they would stand at the window, and watch it as it shone down on the old church and they would say, "God bless the star," and then would bid it good night. By and by there came a time when the boy stood at the window alone, for his little sister was lying on her death-bed. He would turn to the pale, patient face and together they would say. "God bless the star." One night he looked out at it weeping, for it was shedding its pure light down on a newly made grave. Then he dreamed that on the rays that came to him through his star, he saw angels decending from the open star, and bearing his little sister up to the world of light. He wanted to follow, but the angel said, Not yet," and he woke to find the star shining. After this, he would think of the star as his future home where he would meet his sister. Soon a little babe was born to gladden the heart of the sor rowing e' ild, but it, too, left this world for one of parer light. Then the stars opened again, and the angels descended as before, and he heard the voice of his sister's angel say, "Is it my brother," and they said, "not he, but another Ir one day, and a messenger came saying bring her blessing on her darling boy." Again that night the star opened, and he saw the company of angels coming to bear the mother to her two children. He heard the voice of his sister ugain, Is it my brother?" and the angel said, Not yet, it is the mother." Then he cried, "Here I am sister, take, me," but the star closed, and when he woke the star was shining. Years after, when he was an old man, on whose face the foothis beloved child. "Is my brother come?" asked the rist r. "Not yet, but a maiden daughter," answered the angel. But the old man cried, "Here I am sis found them, read and remember. ter take me." Again the star closed and seemed to shut from him the light of his life. Soon the aged man became B was a Chaldee, who made a great feast, ill, and his children gathered around him whispering, "He is dying." "Yes, I am | C was veracious, when others told lies. dying." Then a holy light shone on his face, and he exclaimed, "I see the star thank God for the star where I will be united to those I love." And the star E was a refuge, where David spared Saul. was shining and still shines upon his grave.

"THE BRIDGE."

LONG WAY AFTER II. W. LONGFELLOW

I stood on the bridge at midnight, as drunk as a son-of-a gun two moons to o'er the city, when there ought to have been but one. I could see their bright reflection, in the waters under me, and I experienced a feeling of wonder and great curiosity. If only one had been there, I would not have been in doubt, but what two moons were doing, I could not well make out. The tide was slowly ebbing, I could hear the waters roll, as I stood in the wavering shadows to hide from the night patrol. How often, oh! how often in the days of suld lang syne, I have tried to cross at midnight, and got left every time. But to-night I was hot and restless, my mind was full of care, and the walk that lay before me, was more than I could bear. I had no latch. indignant, "its salt." So when a lady asked her servant if the hired man cleaned off the snow with my face, and has almost made a young alacrity, she replied.

"No, ma'am, he used a shovel." The same literary turn of mine which we have been illustrating is sometimes used intentionally; and perhaps a little maliciously, and thus becomes the property of wit instead of blunder. Thus we hear of a very polite and impressive gentleman who said to a youth in the street. "Boy, may I inquire where Robinson's drug store is?"

"Certainly, sir," replied the boy, very respectfully.

"Fish, you fool; what do you suppose?" "Did any of you ever see an elevant's skin?" inquired a teacher of an infant "I have," exclaimed one.

"Where?" asked the teacher. "On the elephant," said the boy, laughing. Sometimes this sort of wit degen-
