WHERE'S JIM RILEY?

I wonder where Jim Riley is? It's been a month or more Since last he said "Goodbye" to us a standin' in the door An' peltin' him with roses that were redder than the mouth Of the sweetest girl that ever kissed a sweetheart in the south!

I wonder where Jim Riley is? I think o' him at night, When the whippoorwills are singin' an' the dew's a fallin' light On the sweet, old fashioned roses that are coverin' like snow The gardens—dreamin'—dreamin, of the one that loved 'em so.

I wonder where Jim Riley is? I think o' him at morn, When the first, breath o' daybreak comes a keenin' thro' the corn, An' the lark's wet wings are lifted, an' he skims across the gray, An' the swamp thrush is a singin' of his soul into the day.

The mockin' birds remember him; on every rumpled tree I hear 'em singin', singin' of his melodies to me; An' they set my soul to sighin', an' I am sayin' half aloud! "Now, don't them Georgia mockin' birds do Mister Riley proud!"

It can't be he's forgot us? Yet, he's keepin' still so long! Here's a garden full o' roses; can't we swap 'em for a song? An' they're whiter than the cotton blooms, an' redder than the mouth Of the sweetest girl that ever kissed a sweetheart in the south!

TOO LATE.

DEATH WHEN FORTUNE SMILED— STRANGE THINGS HAPPEN IN MINING CAMPS.

The number who have worked and delved in following a prospect until their money or their patience became exhausted are many, says the Auburn, Col., Herald. And it is not infrequently happens that such parties live to learn that they abandoned their claims when a few more days' work, or possibly a few more strokes with the pick, would have revealed the lead which they had worked to find.

A story was told to us by an old miner a few days ago of an Eastern college professor who came out here in early days and started to prospect on some of the quartz leads around Grass Valley.

When he arrived here had $70,000, and he bought up quite a number of claims and spent his money freely in prospecting them. He worked with a bouyant heart, confident that his labor and investments would be remunerated.

He had a charming wife and four bright children. One thousand after another of his money was sunk into the ground until finally his last dollar was gone, and from outward appearances he was no nearer getting it back than he was when he started.

He became despondent, and while laboring under a fit of mental depression he prepared a draught of deadly poison, gave a drink to his wife and to each of his children, and then, after waiting long enough to satisfy himself that they were past recovery, he partook of the poison and laid down to die with those he loved.

Before their bodies were cold they were found by a man from one of his mines, who had come to inform him that a large vein of rich rock had just been uncovered. He and his had passed beyond the cares of this world, and had no further use for earthly treasure, but the lead that was struck the day of his death turned out a rich one, and yielded gold enough in subsequent years to have made him independently rich.
