THE Wilmington Messenger in speaking of the North Carolina troops in the late war and of the battle of Gettysburg

"If an examination is made of the record of the three days' battle of Gettysburg we think this will be found to be true: That Pettigrew's North Caro lina brigade (four regiments) lost actually more men, killed and wounded, than Pickett's entire Virginia division. One regiment (the immortal 26th) lost more men than any other regiment in all the it will begin early in April. Southern armies lost during the war. We rather believe it lost more than any other regiment on either side. There was not a British regiment in the terrific slaughter and magnificent fighting at Fontency that lost so many. Not one of the British regiments at Waterloo lost so many. Not even the famous Light Brigade, whose splendid valor was sbrated in such striking verse by
