What "Ideal" Wall Looks Like

The Kreta—Design A-223

This illustration shows a single story detached dwelling of the new type with the Ideal wall, the new type of hollow brick which has replaced the old solid brick. The new wall is built with the Ideal wall, the new type of hollow brick which has replaced the old solid brick. The new wall is built with the Ideal wall, the new type of hollow brick which has replaced the old solid brick.

Just ordinary bricks are used in building this wall—the Ideal wall—made of any material and used from time immemorial in stead of laying them on their flat side, however, it has been the case since Pharaoh's days and even before the brick are laid on edge and show the rounded thickness. A new brick on edge does not equal the eight inch length of a brick—the minimum thickness of an outside wall—a hollow space is left inside. The Ideal wall thus combines the advantages of the solid wall construction and the wall of hollow units for residence work. It is significant that brick manufacturers have developed and are advertising this type of wall, although it means that fewer bricks are used in each house. The idea is, of course, to reduce the cost of brickwork as much as possible so that the greatest number of owners may enjoy the advantages of a home of brick. And in the Ideal wall this is done, not by cheapening the material, but by using it more economically and efficiently.

By laying the units on edge, a new and interesting exterior effect is produced, known as "Ideal Plank Bond," here illustrated. Charming effects are obtained with common brick, which are used most often in building this wall, but face brick certainly would look out.

The Common Brick Manufacturers Association, Cleveland, Ohio, can furnish complete literature for this design.

A THOUGHT FOR THE WEEK.

By John Burroughs

I have loved to feel the grass under my feet and the running streams by my side. The hum of the wind in the meadows has always been music to me, and the face of the hills has often comforted me more than the faces of men. I am in love with this world because by my constitution I have needed lovingly in it. It has been home. It has been my point of lookout into the universe. I have not bruised myself against it, nor tried to use it ignobly. I have filled its soul, I have gathered its harvest. I have waited upon its seasons and always have I reaped what I have sowed. While I delved I did not lose sight of the sky overhead. While I gathered bread and meat for my body, I did not neglect to gather its bread and meat for my soul. I have climbed its mountains, roamed its forests, the oppression of its heats, the drench of its rains, the fury of its winds, and always have beauty and joy waited upon my goings and comings.

YOU OUGHT TO DO.

How many times have you had some one come to you and but in and say, "Here, I'll tell you what you ought to do?"

Have you not felt like answering, "Who gave you any license to tell me what I ought to do?"

The chances are ten to one that the fellow who comes to you with such cocksureness doesn't know anything about your conditions or problems. His idea, if he has one, is half-baked, based upon part information if any at all.

His suggestion, and his manner, made you mad, of course.

Well, remember it. And when you go to some one else and offer him advice, or tell him what he ought to do, be sure you know what you are talking about.

BUT THERE AREN'T MANY.

St. Peter was examining a newly arrived immigrant seeking entrance. He had given his occupation as editor and publisher. Following is a transcript of the testimony:

Q: "Ah, yes—print the world's greatest newspaper?"

A: "No, sir. Just a common rag."

Q: "Circulation the largest in your city?"

A: "No, sir; oh, no indeed! One of the smallest in the country."

"You'll do," said St. Peter. "Pick your harp."

AN ARTFUL ODDER

"I believe I'll write another column on 'Whether Are We Drifting?' remarked the editor of the Otago Daily Press."

"Are you hard up for something to write about?"

"Exactly. As nobody seems to know whether we are drifting, I can get out a column and leave the question with my readers." Birmingham Age-Herald.

SNAKES FOR BOUNTY

The department of the Yonah, France, infested by vipers, offered 20 centimes a head as a bounty. An enterprising farmer, turned their head into a snake farm, and had sold 48,000 heads to the government when their vicious neighbors gave the game away. A sentence of two years "for obtaining money on false pretenses" was reduced to 18 months, since it had to be admitted that the man had kept the letter of the agreement—Scientific American.

APPLIED WISDOM

"Of course, you can't be expected to show the wisdom of Solomon." "No," assented Senator Borah; "but even if I had his wisdom it might not do me any good in the present emergency. I don't and anything in the Proverbs to indicate that Solomon had made an especially profound study of the term."
