Pedestrianism Extraordinary.

A few nights since a party of three applied for and were given lodgings at the station house, who are certainly entitled to the name of champion pedestrians.

They were Mr. C. G. Castle, a half-breed Indian, and his wife and wife's mother. Starting from Atlanta, Ga., they reached this city in 3 weeks after leaving that point, walking on an average 35 miles per day.

The party state that they are not particularly fatigued from their long journey, nor do they appear to be. The shoes of both the women wore out, and they used cloth bandages as a substitute.

A Remarkable Wound and Skillful Surgery.

Col. H. A. Dowd, the gallant and intrepid Colonel of the 15th N. C. Troops, a resident of Tarboro, was wounded at the head of his regiment during the terrible battle of Malvern Hill, where North Carolina lost so many noble boys.

of the Colonel and came near proving fatal. Dr. J. H. Baker, one of our most skillful surgeons performed a difficult operation, extracting several pieces of bone that had been loosed by the ball and were moving about on the 10th inst., 15 years after, the Colonel was stricken down again, when another operation was performed by Dr. Baker, and a piece of bone, let it tend fast to a fragment of bone, was cut out. The Colonel is up to-day. No surgeon could have become more expert or successful, and we wish the Colonel much joy to repay for his long suffering. He has borne it all cheerfully all along and maintained his character as the most popular man in the county.

Newbern Nut Standing.

A friend has kindly furnished us with the following account of an amusing scene, of which he was an eye-witness: Rev. Mr. Johnston, of Elenton, N. C., was a man of most genial disposition and attractive manners, but one whose great fund of humor and unusually keen sense of the ridiculous often put to severe test the gravity of demeanor thought to be requisite in one of his profession.

One Sunday during the afternoon service a stalwart negro woman brought her baby to be baptized. Now the rector was held in great reverence and affection by the negroes thereabouts, particularly by the numerous servants of his large family connection, to whom he was familiarly known as "Mars Sammy." On this occasion, fully impressed with the importance of the event, the woman and her husband had arrayed themselves in gorgeous apparel. Her bandanna turban, brilliant in color and portentous in dimensions, was a sight to behold, while the man's entire "get-up" was fearfully and wonderfully made.

"Hain this child been already baptized or no?" To his dismay the mother, who lisped badly, answered: "Yatal! Muth Thammay." Hastily explaining, and adjuring her to drop his title for the nonce, the service proceeded to the question: "Name this child?" when the mother, lisping worse than ever, replied, "Ludwig (Lucy) thir" (Sir).

"No! Muth Thammay," returned the woman bewilderment, "Is Ludly this?" "I cannot baptize any Christian child with that name. Choose another."

Still the mother earnestly persisted—the father meanwhile looking on with mouth and eyes stretched to their utmost, utterly dumfounded and helpless. "Lud-o-th-y-thir."

"Indignity and fearful of sex, Mr. J. raised the infant, saying, "George Washington, I baptize thee," when the mother greatly excited, interposed, crying, "Thotop! Muth Thammay, thotop! That boy you's gwine to baptize is a gal!"
