MY PILLOW AND I.

How brave and how strong in the world's rough crowd, where men at the shrine of Mammon are bowed, How glad and how gay in the glare of day, when the din of trade drives sadness away; And then how feeble and weary and lone, when night's black wing o'er the city is thrown-

How cowardly weak, as I wakeful lie, It is known but to us-my pillow and I.

Then the loves and hates that I half forget, In life's busy hours ere the sun is set, Are pondered o'er with a smile or a tear, And whispered names of the near and dear; or I humbly muse on the wasted years of a vanished youth, with its hopes and

Till perchance I startle the night with a we are right good friends, my pillow and I; We are right good friends, my pillow and I; Itell it my wrongs when no one is nigh, And it ne'er reveals my confessions weak, But kisses in pity my feverish cheek, Nor ever recoils with a feigned alarm From the rough embrace of my weary arm, and repose no treasure can have But gives me repose no treasure can buy; A sacred tie binds-my pillow and I.

It knows full well in the watches we keep Twixt a whispered prayer and reluctant

It knows full well how the shadows last which passion and pride o'er the heart have

And it blots the tears that are vainly shed over hopes destroyed and ambitions dead; Then it brings forgetfulness by and by, And we dream in peace-my pillow and I.

In the days and nights of disease and pain It has cooled the fire of a wandering brain, t has lured me back when I seemed to stand on the shadowy brink of another land-Yes, tempted me back with its gentle cares 3 And soothed with its touches my cruel Though others prove false, the world I defy distress:

To part or estrange-my pillow and I.
