Ladies doing their own marketing will do well to remember that young poultry may be told by the tip of the breast-bone being soft, and easily bent between the fingers, and when fresh, by its bright full eye, pliant feet and soft, moist skin.

Col. McRae's Lecture.

One of the richest intellectual treats that has been presented to the citizens of Wilmington for many a long day, was spread before them last evening at the Opera House, the occasion being the lecture of Col. Duncan K. McRae, for the benefit of the Library Association of this city. From the well known ability and wonderful elocutionary powers of that gentleman the highest expectations had been excited in the minds of all, and we unhesitatingly say that the reality far exceeded the most sanguine anticipations. It was a wonderful production, wonderful in its depths of learning, its sparkling wit and bubbling humor, its touching pathos and burning eloquence, an eloquence that stirs the heart, that compresses the lip, and makes the blood tingle through the veins. We have heard orators in the Senate, upon the forum and on the hustings, leaders of men and directors of public opinion, but we have listened to none who possessed in so great a degree that magnetic power that leads captive the will and controls the senses, as this gifted North Carolinian. We use the word gifted in its most comprehensive meaning, for such powers as were displayed last evening come from above, and are not acquired in schools.
The subject of the lecture was Genius and Talent. Mr. Charles E. French, the President of the Library Association, introduced the orator in a brief but most felicitous manner. After a graceful exordium, in which with exquisite taste he alluded to the distinguished gentleman who addressed the citizens of Wilmington from the same place a short time since, he launched at once into his subject. We will not attempt to follow him, for the simple reason that we cannot. His analysis of the difference between genius and talent was most acute and discriminating. Judged by the criterion of success, talent was the most desirable. He cited many instances in ancient and modern history in confirmation of the truth of the position assumed.—Hannibal and Scipio, Napoleon and Wellington, Homer, Shakespeare, Dante, Marlborough, Washington, Jackson and our own peerless Lee. While genius astounded the world, in most cases it was but the brilliant flight of the flaming meteor, ending oftentimes in failure and sombre darkness; talent, on the contrary, more fixed in its purpose and less erratic in its movements, achieved the grandest results, and like the North Star in the heavens, though it shone with a feebler lustre, yet was fixed and immovable, a never failing guide in the pathway of life.
His delineation of the genius of Shakespeare was masterly; we thought it about the best part of his address, at least it so seemed to us, and the rapt attention with which the audience listened to his burning words as with a diamond pen he sketched the character of the world's mightiest poet, showed at once their sympathy with the subject and their admiration of the genius who portrayed it in such characters of living light.
As we said at the beginning of this article the whole address was wonderful. We do not know how others felt, but for ourselves, we are free to say that we were charmed. The only fault, if it can be called a fault, was the superabundance of good things with which it abounded and the almost reckless prodigality with which they were scattered around. In the midst of the enjoyment of a humorous squib or delicate satire, like the lightning's flash would come a burst of eloquence or touch of pathos, causing the pulse to throb more wildly or dimming the eye with tears. And so it was throughout the two hours during which he spoke, two hours of intense delight to all who heard him. The concluding portion of his address was simply sublime; any attempt on our part to report it would only mar its beauty and its grandeur. It should have been read to be appreciated. The flashing eye, the thrilling voice, the rapid yet graceful gesticulation, all combined to give increased effect to the eloquence that charmed and delighted.
In common with all who heard the lecture last evening, we thank the Library Association for the pleasure they afforded us, and we are very sure that our people generally will join with us when we now do in the language of Oliver Twist—ask for more of the same sort and as frequently as possible.
Poultry requires skillful carrying. The requisites are grace of manner, ease in the performance, a sharp knife of medium size, a perfect knowledge of the position of joints and the most complete mode of dissecting.

Back Home.

The gentlemen who went up from this city to Raleigh in the interest of preventing an extension of the charter of the R. & A. A. L., have all returned here. It is expected that the bill will be reported next week, when it is possible that Fayetteville street may again be alive with Wilmingtonians.

TO ADVERTISERS.

Geo. P. Rowell & Co's
SELECT LIST OF
Local Newspapers

Many persons suppose this list to be composed of CHEAP low-priced newspapers. The fact is quite otherwise. The catalogue states exactly what the papers are. When the name of a paper is printed in FULL FACE TYPE it is in every instance the BEST paper in the place. When printed in CAPITALS it is the ONLY paper in the place. When printed in roman letters it is neither the best nor the only paper, but it usually is a very good one, notwithstanding. The list gives the population of every town and the circulation of every paper. IT IS NOT A CHEAP LIST. At the foot of the Catalogue for each State the important towns which are not covered by the list are enumerated. IT IS AN HONEST LIST. The rates charged for advertising are barely one-fifth the publishers' schedule. The price for single States ranges from $1 to $50. The price for one inch four weeks in the entire list is $500. The regular rates of the papers for the same space and time are $2,326.66. The list includes 948 newspapers of which 179 are issued DAILY and 776 WEEKLY. They are located in 789 different cities and towns, of which 26 are State Capitals, 546 places of over 5,000 population, and 486 County Seats. Lists sent on application. Address Geo. P.
