Their Peculiar Names and the Peculiari y of Their Eyes.

In 1827 there came intoold Mr. Gallagher's hat store a man who asked to look at a cap. He was shown a number of organ it as PONIFIVE HAMEDY for all caps, and, selecting one that suited, he the disease, that care pai s in hel wer stated that he would take four of them. The hatter was somewhat astonished to hear the man ack for four caps at once, especially as he said he wanted them all the same size.

"Have you four sons of one size?" asked Mr. Gallagher.

"Yes, sir, I have; and I've got sixteen others besides," answered the man. "Where are they?" inquired the hatter who was now all torn up by curiosity at the strange statement. "They're down here at the market," was the reply.

"Bring them here," said the hatter, and I will make them all a present of a cap each."

The man went out and shortly returned, chasing into the store a drove of boys that looked something like the famous staircase band you might see in the theatre, if you ever visited such a place.

yourselves at home," shouted Mr. Gallagher, as the string blocked up the doorway. And he was soon busy "fitting" their pates with eaps.

"This 'er's Thomas Dittimus," said the bappy father, dragging forth the oldest of the gang. "He's the first-born, and a thirty-five years old."

He was speedily suited with a cap and told to stand aside.

"This hyer one," said the ald stockraiser, "is the next oldest. His name is Christopher Holmes." And the father grabbed another of the drove as though he were a big sheep. "Ef you'll notice, stranger, you'll see that the first boy has got black eyes like mine, and this one has blue eyes like his mother." It was but the work of a second to slap a cap on the blonde head, and he was pushed over by the side of his older brother, with the injunction not to get mixed up with the others till every fellow had got his

"You see every other one is blue eyed, and the rest is black eyed so far, and this helps to keep the run of them if you understand the system, but when you come to go through the whole string you'd get mixed after the first ten, as I'll explain to you further along. Now, this one is Cal-ander Jones," and making a dash in among the mob the daddy brought out a fourth son and almost held him up by the back of the neck. A cap was pressed down over his head, and he was assigned a position among his seniors.

Number five was fished out of the regment and introduced as Eecy Iey. He got his cap and went to join the others that were already fitted out. Then came Osy Neeshy, followed next by George Wampum, then Shawho Cato.
