The Story of Bonanza Mackay's Life-The Romance of a Millionaire's Marriage.

Among the number of men who have leaped from comparative poverty and obscurity in this country in the past half century none stand out more promin Paris. His name is known all over parilla alone will effectually eradicate the continent, and the vast project of it. laying another cable across the Atlantic, has been written and said about him. as a matter of course, but few persons are acquainted with his carly life, and the fact that he was at one time a resident of this city has never been made public. As a reporter was passing down Main street yesterday, a gentle man standing at the corner of Twelfth street remarked: "You see that build-ing over there?" pointing to the house on the northwest corner of Twelith and Main. Upon the reporter's replying in the affirmative he continued : 'I suppersons to know that Mackey once the business .- Wall Street News. lived there, and kept a saloon. of this some months later, and started a subscription for the widow's benefit, contributing liberally himself, and raising a neat little sum. This so touched the widow's heart that she called on him to thank him for his kindness. She was young and pretty, with a childish face and winning ways, and captured Mack-ey's heart completely. His courtship was a quiet one and of short duration and soon the pretty widow united her destiny with his. Mackey was then a rich man, but he kept widening his field of action, until in connection with Flood, O'Brien and Fair. he established the Nevada bank, and Louis, McClain went from Baltimore to manage, it. Since that time Mackey's career has been familiar to almost every schoolboy. Unlike the majority of men, however, he does not forget that he was once dependent himself, and his charity has been great. He is a member of the Catholic church, and es., tabltshed an orphan asylum for the children of that denomination in Nevada City, which he still supports. He is always ready to give for charity's sake, and in addition is polite and courteous to everybody.-Louisville Courier-Journal.

HOW HE STARTED. "Along about 1845 Mackay came to this city in company with one or two others in search of employment. He was a young man, strong, active and willing to work at almost anything which would afford him a good living. An old two-story frame building stood at the corner over there, and the front room had been used as a saloon. The proprietor closed up a few months be fore, however, and the building was left without a tenant. Mackay had some little money, and as the location was a good one he resolved to start a bar-room there. He made a bargain with the proprietor and secured the place, opening up about a week later. The room and its fixtures would be in strong contrast with the fine saloons of the present day, with their gilded counters and fancy bars. The walls were covered with a simple coat of white paint and the counter was a long narrow one made of pine boards. Behind it interest to inquire from whence he came or who he was. He was an energetic and industrious man, polite and attentive to his customers, and his short figure and smiling face could be seen
