The Daily Review has the largest circulation of any newspaper published in the city of Wilmington.

IN CONGRESS YESTERDAY.

SENATE. WASHINGTON, May 6.—The morning business having been dispensed with, Mr. Fry moved to lay aside the calendar and take up the Shipping bill.

Messrs. Riddleberger and Harriss pressed for the regular order, the first on the calendar being the free bridge bill across the Potomac river. It was important, they said, that that bill be acted upon at once.

Mr. Fry withdrew his motion and the free bridge bill was taken up. Consideration of the Shipping bill was then resumed, and Mr. Beck concluded his speech yesterday.

Mr. Vance addressed the Senate in support of Mr. Vest's amendment providing for free ships and free material. We presented a peculiar spectacle, he said, of a great people of 50,000,000 with enormous exports and imports but without a carrying trade of our own.

The reason for this was that we undertook by legislation to violate the laws of political economy. Any attempt to regulate by law the price of labor or of any other commodity in contravention of the laws of political economy, had proved and would continue to prove too much for our legislators.

It was absurd to attempt to keep up the wages of labor by a protective tariff while the populations of Europe, Asia, Africa and the islands of the sea were pouring into our country, and if the foreign pauper did not come here voluntarily to compete with American labor, he was sent for and brought across the ocean.

Reviewing the history of the early navigation laws of Europe, Mr. Vance said that they had been attempts founded on rapine, plunder and murder, to aggrandise the nations at a time in the world's history when the nations did not understand the principles of political economy.

With all the enlightenment of our age and notwithstanding the changes which European nations have found it necessary to make in their shipping policy, as they became more familiar with the principles underlying commerce and shipping, our own coastwise trade remains exactly in the same position of English shipping in the reign of Richard II.

We have not got it yet to the position where it would correspond to the time even of Cromwell. The party in power had left the country absolutely helpless, with its high tariff. We had no navy, no merchant marine, no fortification no guns, no anything else that would stand twenty-four hours against modern war ships and modern guns.

The House of Representatives. The House at 11:10 went into committee of the whole, after argument on the tariff bill.

Tellers being ordered, Mr. Converse and Mr. Morrison were appointed by the chair. Before taking his place, Mr. Morrison called to the Clerk of the House, who was standing by the Speaker's desk, and exclaimed "Mr. Clerk, see that no damned scoundrel who is paired goes between the tellers."

The Clerk promising to see that fair play should be had, Mr. Morrison took his station, giving Mr. Converse a very cool shake of the hand as he stood opposite that gentleman. Then the voting began and the tellers announced the affirmative vote to be 155.

The first man to pass through in the negative was Mr. Reagan, of Texas, who had been brought in on an invalid chair in order to cast his vote. He was heartily applauded by his friends and received many congratulations upon his apparent recovery from his late severe illness.

The negative vote was announced as 151, and then Mr. George D. Wise, of Va., voted in the affirmative, making the vote stand 156 to 151.

Then cheer followed cheer from the Republican side and the cheers were taken up by the galleries and reverberated from every nook and cranny of the hall. Ladies stood up and waved their handkerchiefs and men their hats.

Mr. Morrison, yielding gracefully to the inevitable, walked smilingly to his seat, and the Tariff bill was dead. The committee rose and reported its action to the House.

The Speaker stated the question to be on striking out the enacting clause and Mr. Morrison and Mr. Turner, of Kentucky, calling for the yeas and nays, it was agreed to—yeas 159, nays 155.

Before the vote was announced the clerk read the names of four pairs, the smallest number of members recorded as paired for yeas: Bennett nay, Ochiltree yea; Muldrow nay, Valentine yea; Nichols nay, Riggs yea; Wood and John D. White.

Mr. Converse moved to reconsider the vote by which the House decided to strike out the enacting clause, and then moved to lay that motion on the table. The motions were carried by a viva voce vote.

STATE NEWS.

Greensboro Bugle: The farmers who prefer sheep to dogs are making things lively in the Hillsdale neighborhood. Eighteen sheep were killed last week, and the shot-gun policy was inaugurated and all dogs away from their masters are doomed. Five have already been killed.

Asheville Advance: An old lady by the name of Emeline Deserheart was killed by the engine of the construction train at Pigeon River Thursday evening. It seems that she had plenty of time to have gotten off the track, but was so frightened she could not get out of the way before she was struck. The engine was knocked down an embankment and instantly killed.

Newbern Journal: The contract for erecting the public school building was awarded yesterday to J. A. Simpson and C. H. Brown for $3,447 and pressed brick for the front to be furnished by committee. While the white taxpayers of the city have paid a special tax for the Graded School about $2,500 the colored taxpayers have paid but $190. It is to be remembered that this tax is levied upon both alike, but each pays it to support schools for their own race.

Fayetteville Sun: On Monday, 28th ult., as the material train on the Southern extension of the C. F. & V. V. R. R. was passing a turnout, Pat Ingram, a train hand, threw off a large iron wrench to the section hands, whose hand car was on the turnout; the train was going at quite a rapid rate, and Ingram not making proper allowance for its momentum threw the wrench considerably farther than he intended to and struck Mr. Sikes, a young man who was standing on the side track, full in the stomach, injuring him fatally. He survived until Friday, suffering excruciating agony all the while. Pat Ingram, the unfortunate perpetrator of the deed, was placed in the Lumberton jail to await trial.

Charlotte Observer: Dr. Edward Seagle, a young physician formerly of Newton, but late a resident of Lowville, in Lincoln county, committed suicide at his boarding house in that place last Sunday, by drinking laudanum. Dr. Seagle boarded at Mrs. Withers, Sunday morning, about 10 o'clock, he came in and went to his room, and those who noticed him state that he was under the influence of whiskey at the time. He was undisturbed until about half-past twelve o'clock, when his landlady knocked at his door to summon him to dinner. There was no response to her rap and opening the door she found the young man lying on the bed ad breathing heavily. She tried to rouse him, but failed and suspecting that something was wrong, assistance was summoned.

An empty laudanum bottle was found and explained the cause of the young physician's heavy slumber. Though the usual means of restoration were at once resorted to, it was soon apparent that they would be of no avail, as the dose taken was an unusually heavy one, and the drug had been well absorbed by his system before he was found. All attempts to keep the unhappy doctor awake, even for a minute at a time, were unavailing, and at six o'clock in the afternoon he died. Dr. Seagle was an unmarried man, about 26 years old. He was well known in Charlotte, where he used to visit quite frequently. He has a sister living at Newton to whom he left addressed a letter that was found after he died. The letter begged her to forgive him, but in the letter the writer assigned no cause for the suicide. He was said to have been a very popular young man and enjoyed a lucrative practice, but unfortunately would drink too much at times. Our informant states that there was a woman in the case.

The Charlotte bound passenger train, Capt. Pride Jones, conductor, struck and killed a negro man named Sydney Williams, about one mile from Pelham, last Saturday night. The negro was walking the track and as the train neared him, the engineer pulled the whistle cord. Those on board felt the train slackening abruptly under the air brakes, there was a slight jar and then the train came to a full stop. Conductor and train hands stepped off and found the body of a negro lying in the ditch. All the ribs on one side were shattered, both legs and arms were broken and the head crushed in. The negro paid no heed to the warning signal, but deliberately turning, he faced the headlight and stepped forward to meet the engine as it drove down upon him. It was a clear case of suicide.
