Travel to the Sound is continually on the increase.

The different cemeteries were thronged with visitors yesterday afternoon.

Mr. L. S. F. Brown, of this city, has been appointed a notary public by Gov. Jarvis.

Which shall we have first, a new hotel or the railroad to Onslow county? We need both.

Yesterday was a lovely day and the churches had large congregations, both in the morning and at night.

We invite the attention of our citizens to the fact that first quality shirts are being made to order at one dollar at the Wilmington Shirt Factory.

Rev. Dr. Pritchard and the other delegates to the Baptist Convention, which has been in session at Baltimore during the last week, are expected to arrive here to-night.

The ladies connected with the M. E. Church, at Smithville, held a lawn party on Friday and Saturday nights last, which was well attended and was in every way a perfect success.

Mon. A. M. Waddell announces himself in this issue of the REVIEW as a candidate for Congress from this district, subject to the action of the Democratic Convention of the district, when called.

Capt. John Harper, of the Passport, will on Wednesday give the first of the season of those pleasant family excursions so popular here during the past two years. If it is a good day he may look, we think, for a large passenger list.

Thanks to the committee, Messrs. G. W. F. Harper, M. M. Courtney, J. L. Nelson, F. Wiesenfeld, M. V. Moore, W. W. Scott and J. M. Spainhour, for an invitation to attend the celebration of the completion of the Chester & Lenoir R. R., to be held at Lenoir on June 5th.

We thank Mr. W. H. Ellsworth for an invitation to the Commencement Exercises of the Ellsworth School, of Henderson, to take place on the 28th inst. The annual sermon is to be delivered by Rev. L. B. Johnston, of Henderson, and the address by Walter H. Page, Esq., of Raleigh.

Marine Accident.

The Clyde line steamer Virginia, from Philadelphia for Charleston, was towed into Smithville this morning by the steamer Benefactor, having lost her propeller. She will be towed to Charleston.

Col. Short.

A correspondent of the News and Observer, writing from Pender county, suggests the name of Col. H. B. Short for nomination for Lieutenant Governor. The writer says: "It nominated it will be a deserved recognition of the life-long and effective service of a modest, high-toned gentleman and faithful servant of the Democratic party."

River and Harbor Bill.

In the River and Harbor bill, which has been reported in the House by the Committee, $75,000 is assigned for the work below Wilmington and $5,000 for the work above Wilmington. There is also $5,000 reported for New River and among the surveys ordered is one for Black River and one for Bogue Sound between New River and Beaufort.

If you need a real good first class cooking stove, don't fail to see the Excelsior Penn., Zeb. Vance and New Emerald, besides others. They are to be found at factory prices at JACOBI'S, who is the manufacturers' agent.

MEMORIAL DAY.

Our Annual Tribute to Our Gallant Dead—General Suspension of Business—The Procession—At the Cemetery—Col. Hall's Address—Decorating the Graves.

Nearly all of the places of business in the city were closed from 2 o'clock until 5 o'clock this afternoon, partly on account of the tender memories connected with the exercises and partly to give all who desired an opportunity to join in the parade. The weather was all that could be desired. The old, middle aged and young, of both sexes, turned out to do homage and honor to the gallant Confederate Dead who sleep in Oakdale. Old men, whose approaching end is near, came out to pay a tearful tribute to their noble heroes whose lives were offered as a willing sacrifice upon the altar of Southern liberty; those of middle age were present to do honor to the memory of those sleeping heroes with whom they had plodded on the weary march, slept in the welcome bivouac and stood shoulder to shoulder in the rude clash of arms, and young men and maidens, to whom the war and its trials were but a proud and glad tradition, were there to listen with noble pride and thrilling heart to the oft told tale of a brave soldier's life and heroic death.

There were fragrant flowers for the hero's graves.

And reverent tears for the hero braves; And tender hands laid the tributes there And watered the sod with memorial tear.

And the vernal shades gave the echo back

Of the volley fired o'er the last bivouac. Ah! rest in glory and peace, brave boys. The tributes you hear is but martial noise

Of peaceful alarms, though the hearts of steel

That shoulder the arms that gave you this peal—

That pay you this last sad tribute today

Are clothed in and love, as you loved, the Gray.

The procession was a few minutes late in its formation, in consequence of which the line of march was not taken up until 4:10 o'clock, when it moved in accordance with the programme as published in the REVIEW of Saturday, the band playing the "Garland of Flowers" march, in D minor, by Boyer. The music was fine, the military were prompt and correct in their movements and there was no jar in the details to annoy and hinder the proceedings.

The route was as usual, and as laid down in the programme, up Fourth street to Campbell, up Campbell to Oakdale. Arrived at the Cemetery the procession passed through the gates and up the broad path to the Confederate lot where the bronze soldier keep watch night and day over the remains of those who sleep beneath him. The services were inaugurated with a solemn and impressive dirge, rendered by the Wilmington Cornet Concert Club, and then they were formerly opened with the following beautiful and appropriate prayer by the Chaplain, Rev. James Carmichael, D. D.

O, ALMIGHTY GOD, who alone canst order the unruly wills and affections of sinful men, grant unto us that we may love the thing which thou commandest and desire that which thou dost promise; that so, among the sundry and manifold changes of the world, our hearts may surely there be fixed where true joys are to be found, whither our Saviour Christ hath gone before, who through death has overcome death and opened the gate of everlasting life to all those who depart hence in the Lord, and where the souls of the faithful enjoy perpetual rest and felicity. Grant that we may so follow Thy blessed saints in all virtuous and godly living that we may come to those unspeakable joys, which Thou hast prepared for those who truly love Thee; that we with them may have our perfect consummation and bliss both in body and soul, in Thy eternal and everlasting glory. Remember in mercy all who mourn, and do Thou, the God of pity, comfort their every sorrow, giving them patience under their affliction and a blessed deliverance from every grief. And grant that the course of this world may be so peaceably ordered by Thy governance that Thy people may joyfully serve Thee in all godly quietness, that so they may walk in the ways of truth and peace and finally be numbered with Thy saints in glory everlasting. Make us ever mindful of the time when we shall be down in the dust, and grant us grace always to live in such a state that we may never be afraid to die, so that, living or dying, we may be Thine, through the merits and satisfaction of Thy Son, Jesus Christ, our most Blessed Lord and Saviour. Amen.

At the close of the prayer the Cornet

Concert Club again discoursed a dirge and this was followed by an ode by the choir and then the Orator of the Day, Hon. E. D. Hall, arose and delivered the following address:

To the Ladies of the Memorial Association:

Twenty years ago, this fair land of ours was convulsed from one extremity to the other with one of the direst conflicts of modern times; the shock of contending hosts, the groans of the wounded and the cry of lamentation was heard all over the land. The flames of burning cities, towns and hamlets lit up the horizon in all directions; gaunt famine and disease stalked abroad in our midst; the evil passions of men were aroused to a point of frenzy, for it was a war between men of the same race, and that race the Anglo-Saxon; section against section, brothers against brothers. In such a contest the effects could not fail to be disastrous to all concerned. To the one, believing, as they did, that the cause of liberty and a republican form of government was bound up in the integrity of the States, and that the grand experiment of man's ability to govern himself was dependent on the perpetuity of the union, and that a free government and an asylum for the oppressed of all lands was to be the reward of success, it is not to be wondered at that they should have entered into the contest with all their souls, and that they were determined to exhaust every particle of their immense resources, if need be, to preserve as they thought their sacred "Ark of the Covenant;" and truly did they, like Hercules, put their shoulders to the wheel and like worthy descendants of the Anglo-Saxon race, regardless of the immensity of the task, determined to succeed, and did succeed. But oh! my friends, at what a cost! Three hundred thousand of their bravest fill soldiers' graves, the lamentation of the widow and orphan saddened the land, and for four long years the fate of their beloved union hung balanced in the scale, and fearful were they, that each moment an unlooked-for blow would shatter it to atoms. A half century will hardly bind up the wounds they sustained in those four years.

To the other side, consisting of the same race of men, animated by the noblest impulses that ever stimulated the human breast, an ardent love of liberty, a devotion to virtue and truth, a thorough hatred of oppression, a devotion to the teachings and traditions of their forefathers, an earnest and thorough conviction that the cause for which they took up arms was right and sacred, the unanimity of all classes and the universal determination to sacrifice all that they held dear for the success of their cause, precluded the idea that the movement was spasmodic and hasty, and that they had not maturely considered the emergency and cost. For the war cloud that burst over our head in 1861 was not unexpected; it had been hovering over us; in all its black proportions, for more than half a century. We considered the time had come to maintain all that we claimed, and honestly thought we had a right to; that the emergency was upon us, and the issue was joined. Manfully and bravely we met it, and for four years the fearful contest lasted. How well and bravely our people met the issue, is not my purpose to dwell upon; that we will leave to the future and impartial historian. Now I speak to the present generation of the results of that contest; the tear has not yet ceased dropping from the eye of the mourner; the rains of heaven have not yet levelled the graves scattered through nearly every State; the blackened memento still marks the spot of many a fierce strife; many a gaping wound still remains unhealed; and in the South at large the wealth and the civilization of generations were in four years swept away.

But, my friends, twenty years and more have passed away, and the healing hand of time has touched us, and happy has been its results in many ways. The angry passions of men have cooled down; the mighty results of the war have been acquiesced in quietly by all concerned; and all who were concerned have learned many salutary lessons they were unaware of before. We have accepted all that we ought to have accepted, and relinquished nothing that we ought not to have willingly yielded. We have commenced a new era of prosperity. The future looks bright to us, the war clouds have passed away, we hope, forever. While we enter joyfully into our new prosperity, we have the proud consciousness of not having in the slightest degree sacrificed our manhood or self respect.

Standing thus, my friends, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and eighty four, nearly twenty years after the sound of the last gun has died away in the far distance, and the angry passions, of men have had time to cool, and a thorough appreciation of the whole situation, we may certainly be allowed to speak plainly and without misconception.

We have assembled here this day, which is held sacred in the minds of all true Southern people, to drop a tear to the memory of those dear ones who for more than a generation have been sleeping their manhood away, and to again decorate their sacred dust with fresh immortelles; and to keep green in our memories their virtues and their heroisms, and teach our children the immense obligations we owe them, in showing them how easy it is, with fortitude and virtue, to die in the discharge of duty.

To the educated young men of the South, and especially those of wealth, the call to arms and to defend their States in the tented field was a call to honor and renown; they knew that if in the battle field it was their fate to be cloven down, their name would be the theme of the future historians, and their names would be kept green and fresh in the hearts of their comrades, and fair and lovely hands would strew their graves with laurels. But to the humble and unknown, in short, the great and heroic mass of our armies, the common soldier, no such cheering reflections were presented to them.

If they went down amid charging squadrons and in the smoke of battle, it was to rise no more. No historic muse would write and transmit their glorious deeds of daring to after ages; no poet would weave wreaths to deck their humble brows. It was a sight to be witnessed by angels, when men thus go forth to battle for the liberty of their country, without one selfish motive to prompt them; without one hope of being remembered in after ages; knowing that to fall, was to them to remain "unwept, unhonored and unsung."

Many left behind them objects dearer than light and life; dearer than all else this earth contained, save liberty and honor. For liberty they lived; for liberty they were content to die. The anguish they encountered in leaving their homes, the parting from wives and children, the terrible fear that they saw them for the last time, and in many cases leaving the gaunt wolf of war entering their doors to carry off their loved ones—oh! such sorrows, I write, my feeble tongue will not attempt to describe! Such sorrows are sacred, and like the Greek painter of the sorrows of Agamemnon, I shall draw a veil and leave to imagination what cannot be painted.

To us of the passing generation the scenes and times are still fresh in our memories, never to be obliterated. To us, it is not "like a snow flake on the river, a moment white, then gone forever." But to the coming generation, those who are entrusted to our care and guidance, it should be our sacred duty to instill in them a veneration, a holy love and admiration for those departed heroes and martyrs whose memories we are assembled here to perpetuate.

Let us now and always hold up their virtue and fortitude as worthy of emulation; they freely gave up their lives, to what they thought was right, and on the altars of their country; never forget them.

Above all, beware of and show as a loathsome thing those who would attempt to cast slurs or contempt on their names or the cause for which they died. For to them it was sacred! Right or wrong, they discharged their duty as they understood it, and cursed be the North Carolinian who would ever attempt to defame them.

And now, to you, Ladies of the Memorial Association, pardon me for saying a few words. You, like your sisters all over this fair sunny land of ours are engaged in a sacred work, a work of love and duty. To you are intrusted, and you have willingly accepted, the sacred task of keeping bright and transmitting to generations to come the fires of patriotism, virtue and a chivalrous devotion to duty, to perpetuate which these heroes of ours laid down their lives. Teach our children that in these days of innovation and new ideas that it will be dangerous to depart in the slightest degree from their high standard of religious virtue and a sense of duty so characteristic of their forefathers. Teach them to so conduct themselves that in all time to come they can point to the sacred mound and say, there lie my ancestors and my pride! Strew garlands over their humble graves—England has her grand museum of Westminster Abbey, France her St. Denis, where the great are entombed with bronze and marble. But let your dead have a more lasting and grander monument than these. Let their memories for all time to come be embalmed in the hearts of those who are to come after us.

The Doxology, by the choir, others joining in, was followed by the Benediction and then the floral offerings which had been prepared by the tender hands and loving hearts of the ladies were bestowed around the monument, each with its appropriate inscription to the never to be forgotten dead. A volley by the Wilmington Light Infantry was fired at the close and then the large assemblage dispersed to lay loving tributes of affection and reverence on the graves of the Confederate dead who sleep in Oakdale.

Dr. Watson's Ministrations.

Bishop Watson, at the afternoon services in St. James' Church, yesterday, administered the rite of confirmation to one person, a lady. In the course of his remarks during the service, the Bishop spoke very feelingly of his long and affectionate intercourse with the members of the parish and the parting which was so soon to take place. He has been the Rector of the parish from March, 1863, until May, 1884, over twenty-one years, and during that period he had baptised 1,156 persons, married 156 couples and conducted funeral service 550 times. There had also been 403 persons confirmed in that church during his ministrations.
