IS HE SINCERE?

The tone of cert in journals in reference to the meaning of Mr. Tilden's letter prompts us to ask was he sincere in what he said respecting his candidacy? They say no, at least their language is plainly susceptible of this in- with laughter. terpretation.

what he said. If the former, then his sincerity should not be questioned; if the latter, then he is unworthy to be the leader of a great party. Mr. Tilden is certainly the best judge of his physical condition, and his superior wisdom and experience in public affairs but qualify him to pass judgment upon his capacity | engagement is announced to meet the demand of this high and difficult position.

We believe him to be mentally fit for the place and it would give us unmixed pleasure to support him if nominated. We would do so because we believe he is thoroughly honest, and we have an 'abiding faith in the omnipotence of honesty." To every clear-headed man who can interpret pure, terse English, his meaning is unmistakable. - The insinuation of insincerity which 18. perhaps unwittingly, brought against him by his over xealous friends, is to be deprecated. Those who charge it Gramercy.

It is a shame that a man who has labored so wisely and faithfully for his and true Remedy, and may be implicitparty, and who has exhibited such ly relied on when every thing e'se fails. unselfish patriotism should be accredited with the low ambition and wily curning of the political demagogue.
