The first full year when the Brooklyn bridge was open to traffic there were 11,271,897 passengers carried on the bridge cars. Last year in eleven months the number carried was 26,-588,595. The increase in the use made of the bridge is enormous, yet it has not interfered as much as was expected with ferry traffic.

The London correspondent of the New York World says: "I have just heard from a good source that Dr. Thomas P. > A special dispatch from London to the New York Evening Sun says that notwithstanding the recently expressed opinion of Dr. Schweinfurth, of Brussels, that no uneasi ness need be felt concerning the fate of Henry M. Stanley and the seemingly optimistic reports to the same effect from Africa, very little hope is felt there of his safety, or even that the explorer is alive. It is thought that although the projectors of the Stanley expedition use publicly a reassuring tone, their private opinion regarding the heroic explorer is in accordance with the opinion of those who, if they have not already given Stanley up, entertain scarcely any hope of his ar rival at Wadelai.

Rev. J. C. Huske, D. D., has been Rector of St. John's Church, Fay etteville, for nearly fifty years. On account of his health he has been compelled to retire and becomes Rector emeritus. He has been succeeded by Rev. Thos. Atkinson, grandson of the late Bishop, and nephew of Col. John Wilder Atkinson, of this city. Mr. Atkinson was installed last Sunday and Dr. Huske preached the sermon. He closed with an address to his successor and this we find in the Fayetteville Ob server and reproduce here. It is a purely beautiful piece of eloquence and we do not wonder that, as the Observer says, there was not a dry eye in the church when he had concluded:

THE STATE CONVENTION.

The Final Ballot for Governor-Fowle Declared the Nominee-Lt. Gov. Stedman's Brave and Patriotic Speech-The Fall Ticket Nominated.

[3p. Corr. Dally Review.)

RALEIGH, N. C., May 31. The proceedings of the Convention to-day have been characterized by the most intense interest. At as late an hour as 3 o'clock last night the Convention took a recess until 9 taught them the catechism. I have o'clock to-day. This was brought about by the united strength of the Alexa ider and Stedman men and as repeated motions during the night their eyes in death, and when, un- to adjourn till to-day had been made and voted down, it was considered that its accomplishment at last by the united votes of the two factions Memory stands to day, looking was an indication that they were working together. The Fowle men were urged by their leaders to vote them when they rejoiced and wept down the motion to adjourn, and as with them when they wept. These they could muster only 465 votes against it, at a time when adjournment seemed fatal to their candidate, the vote was taken as a test mercies of God, I beseech you by of Fowle's strength. It was rumor ed that the motion to take a recess was to enable Mecklenburg to con. I beseech you by the love of Christ sult and that this morning Alexander would be withdrawn and Stedman nominated by the union of the Alexander and Stedman forces. When, therefore, the withdrawal of and pray for them all always, with- Alexander was not made and successive ballots were taken without any break in the respective forces, it appeared that there had been no agreement between the Stedman and Alexander delegates, and where that vote would go was uncertain, when it left Alexander. This encouraged the Fowle men and gave them the prestige the successive ballots, when finally Alexander was withdrawn and the contest narrowed to Fowle and Stedman the impression pervaded the Convention that Fowle would win even before the ballot ting commenced. The prestige therefore was with Fowle when the decisive ballot was taken and the fact was immediately developed that it would result in his nomination, which, as your telegraphic communications have shown, oc cured on the twenty third ballot. The nomination of Fowle was immediately made unanimous and committees appointed to wait upon Judge Fowle and Maj. Stedman, Capt. Alexander not being in the city, and invite them to address the Convention.

The appearance of Maj. Stedman upon the platform, in response to the Convention's invitation, was greeted with signal applause. The severe ordeal in which he was Fishing Tackle. Afull assortment placed. Standing before a vast con course of people who had preferred another above him and suffering the embarrassment of defeat, it was an occasion indeed to try the soul of any man. It was one that public men seldom meet with grace and dignity. It was met by Gov. Stedman with a display of fortitude that partook of the heroic. His face was ghost-like in its paleness, his hand trembled like an aspen leaf, so great was his agitation, and every feature of his face indicated his intense disappointment. But not a word fell from his lips that betokened any He heard nothing whatever through grievous or peevish disappointment but, well and gracefully delivered, his short address was clothed in magnanimous utterances. He came, he said, before the Convention to testify his profound appreciation and everlasting gratitude to the band of friends who had so steadfastly supported him in the contest, and to proclaim that he had for the eager and zealous supporters of Judge Fowle and Capt. Alexander in the city to-day. He echoes the no unkind feeling to indulge but, on the contrary, a sentiment of admiration for the devoted loyalty they had manifested for their favorite candidates. "And what matters it to you, my countrymen, whether Fowle, or Alexander, or Stedmaa be the chosen leader of the Democracy? For when each of these have passed away, and you and I are dead and gone, the enduring principles of the Democratic party will survive to bless your children, to preserve their peace and happiness, and to uphold the integrity and prosperity of North Carolina.

He pledged his loyalty to the sup devotion and service for its success would be undiminished. He had come before the Convention pre pared loyally to abide its decision. and the Convention having used its discretion, he cheerfully acquiesced in the result, persuaded that there could come out of the deliberations of an assembly, com posed of the character and ability so noticeably present here, and out of a contest that had been characterized by a total absence of bitterness or unpleasant feeling, nothing but good to the party and the state. before which his personal ambition or that of any other man, however honorable and natural, should not for a moment be considered.

When Maj. Stedman had finished he was greeted with rounds of applause, and the united opinion was that he had won the admiration of all present by his manly and patriotic bearing under the trying circumstance of defeat.

As Maj. Stedman concluded, Judge Fowle, his successful competitor, appeared upon the platform. Maj. Stedman advanced and shook hands, upon which rounds of applause were given, and cries rang out, "let Stedman introduce him." In obedience to which Maj. Stedman presented Judge Fowle to the audience, JUDGE FOWLE'S SPEECH.

His speech was eloquent and re. ponsive to the good feeling that had prevailed during the contest.-He was deeply sensible of the com. pliment that the convention had done him, and it was the more gratifying to him in that he had received it after so bitter contest. When he considered the high qualifications necessarily fitting que for the high position of Governor of North Carolina, of the chivalrous and gallant statesman of the Cape Fear and the sterling and scholarly rep resentative of patriotic and historic Mecklenburg, he was made aware of the high trust which the Demo cratic party had placed upon him he felt the responsibility thus made greater and with devotion to the principles of the white race of North Carolina and the Democratic party he would endeavor to prepare to meet it honorably and well. He regretted the necessity of a choice which the convention had to make and did he consuit the dictates of his heart upon this occasion he'd constitute a trium virate of Stedman, Alexander and Fowle, clothed like the knights at the round table, each with equal dignity, and that trium. virate he would run as the Demecratic candidate for Governor. then reviewed the work done by the Democratic party, contrasting the peacefulness and honesty of Democratic administration of public affairs with the exasperating corruption and misrule of the Republican party when in power. He concluded amid great applause, echoed and reechoed alike by Alexander, Stedman and Fowle delegations.

A Bad Cut.

Mr. John F. Garrell, Jr., met with quite a painful accident this morning at his father's stall in Front Street Market. A knife he was using slipped and cut a very severe gash on the left hand. The injury was so severe that surgical assis tance was deemed necessary. We hope to hear that he is all right in a few days.

This rain was in good season for sanitary purposes. The gutters on Market street had become very filthy, for want of attention, and we are getting very tired of us ly calling attention to the fact.
