VACATION.

O worker, weary with thy work, Worn with the daily strife, Who knoweth that success is vain. That dreams fade out of life.

Go to thy mother's heart for rest, Deep as thy childhood's sleep, Her tired children safe and close Thy mother yet can keep.

For still 'tis true, as in those days Long past, of myth and song, Calm Nature great all mother is, With love and memory long.

Find then, thou canst, on Nature's heart,

This solace for thy pain-The joy that blossoms with the grass. The gladness of the grain;

The happy breaking into song of brook, and bird, and bee, And on the wind that lifts the wave And bends the willing tree.

On silent pools beneath the hills, Where quiet shadows lie, On waters swift, and changing hue Let fall thy line and fly.

Let thy heart dance with dancing

And with the pattering rain-So shait thou find, though day de cline. Thy childhood's rest again. -Edward Carlton.
