The Western papers speak of a man taking his private car and skipping for a journey of two or three hundred miles, as though it were a matter of every-day occurrence. Such, indeed, is the fact. Private cars in Chicago are almost as common as yachts in New York. Every man, from the attorney of a railroad down through the boundless ramifications of its management until the clerks are reached, controls the railroad attorney will step into his own car and take a run down to Milwaukee in the most matter-offact manner in the world. 'It never occurs to him that he is doing an unusual thing, and yet to a New Yorker the performance seems based upon wealth in unrivalled magnitude.
