The Upper Hand.

Oliver Byron appears at the Opera House to-night in the Upper Hand, one of his new plays and one of his best. He is ably supported by Miss Kate Byron and a good company. There are several very fine scenes in this piece, in one of which two horses are brought on the stage. Miss Byron's costumes were made in Paris and expressly for this play. The indications are that there will be an unusually large Saturday night audience at the Opera House to-night.

King Winter's Court.

There was not a very large attendance last night at St. John's School Room, to witness the second rendition of the pretty little operatta of "King Winter's Court." Those who did not attend certainly missed a treat. It was a charming little entertainment and was beautifully presented, with full costumes and stage accessories. It was worth more than the small price charged for admission and it was worthy of as large an audience as that which assembled the other evening at the Opera House to hear the minstrels.
