And beneath this warm stratum, which gradually increases in depth to twenty five or thirty fathoms, as the distance from land increases there is a sudden fall in temperature which in some cases reached as high as 16° or 18° within a vertical distance of five fathoms. Nearer the Gulf Stream a warm band is also found underlying the cold water, the temperature be tween fifty and one hundred fathoms down being frequently 5° or 10° higher than that found in the same sounding at depths of thirty or forty fathoms. At five hundred fathoms the temperature was usually below 40° Fahr.
