Two thousand citizens of Atlanta, Ga., embracing its best elements, as sembled in mass meeting last Friday evening and determined to take a hand in the government of that go-ahead city. One hundred citizens were selected and empowered to nominate a municipal ticket for the people to ratify. There was great enthusiasm, and the indica tions are that the ticket to be put forth under the auspices of the citizens' movement will receive an overwhelming majority. The Constitution says the great meeting alluded to established two facts, first, "that Atlanta has outgrown ward politics, and that ward politicians can never hope to control the city again," second, "that every man who aspires to be councilman or alderman must have enough strength and enough merit to command not but of the entire city.,'
