A very peculiar and remarkable thing happened in New York bay on Monday night. A saloon keeper, who weighs 300 pounds, was on his way home from Staten Island when he fell overboard. He was not missed and he remained in the water an two colored men by the name of hour and a half before he was rescued. The strange part of the story Toney. is that he could not swim a lick. Neither could he sink and so he floated, without any particular ef fort in that line, until his cries were heard by a passing steamer. A boat was sent to his assistance but they could'nt get him in it and so a rope was passed under his arms and he was towed astern. Another difficulur Latch String Outside ty arose as how he could be got on the two men suspected of the murboard of the steamer but finally a block and tackle was rigged and he was hoisted on board like a big fish.
