The Carolina Farmer.

Asparagus for Rheumanism.

A medical correspondent of an English journal says that the advantages of asparagus are not sufficiently appreciated. Those who suffer from rheumatism are cured in a few days by feeding on this delicious esculent; and more chronic cases are much relieved, especially if the patient avoids all acids, whether in food or beverage. The Jerusalem artichoke has a similar effect in relieving rheumatism. It may be well to remark that most plants which grow naturally near the seacoast contain more or less iodine. and in all rheumatic complaints iodine has long been a favorite remedy. One who has been in the drug business told the writer some years ago that many of the popular patent nostrums which some disinterested people— "for the good of their fellow creatures' -sold at two dollars a bottle, consisted simply of a few cents worth of iodine in solution. Iodine is dangerous, however, in overdose, affecting especially the eye.

CONVENTION. Goldsboro Messenger.

Only two months remain when the people of North Carolina will be called upon to elect delegates for a Constitutional Convention. Do our readers realize the importance of this election? To fully impress its importance upon our people we have rolled up our sleeves and as far as it may be in our power will give our readers all the light possible between now and the first Thursday in August when the election is to be held.

First of all we wish our readers to bear in mind that the Convention is already called in conformity to the present Constitution-by a two third vote of the General Assembly-and therefore the questions of "Conven-tion" or "No-Convention" are not at all to be considered or voted for. There MUST BE a Convention, and the question before our people is "shall it be a Radical or a Democratic Convention?" This fact we ask to be remembered and well considered. That the present carpet-bag Constitution needs amending is admitted on all sides, and the sooner it is done the better.

No body which ever assembled in North Carolina was entrusted with graver responsibilities, and we trust therefore that our people in selecting candidates will consider only their fitness for the impartant duties which will devolve upon the Convention. And thus far the people have shown their appreciation of this fact in the nominations already made. The example set by the county of Orange in nominating ex-Gov. Wm. A. Graham is being followed throughout the State. The candidates are being selected with reference to their abilities and experience, as the counsel of such men will be greatly need in remodelling the Constitution, that under the new Constitution we may have such a system of government as will bring peace and prosperity to North Carolina.

Our present Constitution is the aggravating source whence spring all our local ills. It was imported from the populous State of New York and was imposed upon as by a parcel of hungry carpet-bag adventurers from other States, who knew nothing of our customs and cared little for our resources. They were a pack of wretched carpet baggers, poor, hungry and avaricious, who have since left the State, and whose only object was to create offices for themselves and their unprincipled followers. Coming, as many of them did, from prisons and penitentiaries, they were well skilled in all the arts of rapine and robbery, and artfully, but most successfully, and they play them. The result is before our people. A State debt nearly $40,000,000 is the legacy which they have bequeathed us.

The defects of the present Constitution are so many and so manifest, that aimost every person of ordinary intelligence feels the necessity of a change. Our laws are disgustingly complicated and oppressive. These should be so plain, precise, harmonious and logical in form, and terms that even the plainest mind might understand and comprehend them. There are many serious objections and absurdities in the present instrument, called the Constitution of North Carolina, which in proper time shall receive our attention.

Then let the subject of a Convention, the wrongs it will redress and the blessings it will bestow, the importance of electing good and able Democrats as delegates, be a theme of our people from now till that eventful day in August next when the election will decide the political complexion of the Convention. We in voke all men of all, parties, colors and conditions in the State, to lay party prejudice aside and unite as one people in this great contemplated reform.

About the Convention. [Reidsville News.]

The importance of making a wise, judicious selection of candidates canthe ills engendered by our present fundamental law, and remodel the Canby Constitution, reconciling its contradictions and inconsistence to the new status of things under the nary political sagacity and integrity. We had hoped that the question of constitutional amendment would not be made a political issue, but the Republicans have come and see both of us take, you or I? Lite amendments of the national conpublicans have come out solidly against this movement designed to relieve the people of their burdens,

LETTER PROM JEFFERSON DAVIS

He Goes Vigorously for the Scalp of

The St. Louis Times of Friday publishes the following letter from Mr. Jefferson Davis, addressed to Colonel W. F. Mellen, a former Confederate officer, touching certain matters in Gen. Sherman's book:

MEMPHIS, Tenn., May 27. My dear Sir: Please accept my thanks for your kind letter of the 19th instant, and the accompanying copy of a St. Louis paper containing an extract from the forthcoming work of Gen. W. T. Sherman. My absence delayed the receipt of your letter and this reply to it.

The malice that seeks to revive the nefariously concocted and long since exploded slander which connected my name with the assassination of President Lincoln is quite in character with the man who so conducted his invasion of the South as to render "Sherman's bummers " the synonym of pillage, arson, cruelty to the helpless, and murder of non-combatants, and who closed his career of arson with a false accusation against Gen. Hampton in regard to the burning of Columbia, South Carolina.

But the question arises, why did Gen. Sherman at the date of his reported conversation with Gen. J. E. Johnston suppose me capable of complicity in the assassination of Presi feeling, would of course be ready to dent Lincoln?

General Sherman never was personally acquainted with me, and from those who knew me, either in the United States army or in civil life, sarely learned nothing to justify such suspicion. In the conduct of the war between the States, despite of many baseless accusations, we can proudly point to a record which shows a strict adherence to the usages of war between civilized nations. On what, then, did the suspicion of Gen. Sherman rest? Was it not that, proceeding on the rule of judging others by oneself, he ascribed to me the murderous and malicious traits of his own nature?

He reports a conversation with President Lincoln, from which is to be inferred a desire to have authority for departing from the course which as a soldier he must have known was usual and proper towards prisoners of war. Did he hope to get instructions for the slaughter of the Confederacy's President and cabinet officers, as set forth in the orders of Col. Dahlgren, when he made his raid against Richmond? If the good-natured, characteristic reply of President Lincoln taught him that murder was not the approved measure, it seems to have failed to inspire him with the generosity and chivalry which ever adorns the character of the true soldier and der of General J. E. Johnson there was one prohibiting military expeditions in the country east of the Cattahoochie river. That was the best consideration obtained for the surrender of armies, arms, munitions and manufactories in that section, and it was in violation of that article that the brigade of cavalry, by which I was captured, was scouring the country and freely taking from the un-protected people the little which was left to them for their future subsistence. From the statement of Gen. Sherman we learn that a story had been told, to the effect that I was carrying in wagons millioms of specie to the South, and, therefore, we are left to conclude, was made that expedition in violation of the agreement of surrrender. Though the story of the millions of specie is now admitted by General Sherman to have been a fiction, the admission is made in such terms as would lead the reader to suppose I had been traveling with wagon transportation, and had a few thousand dollars of specie in a valise. But neither supposition would be true. I had recently joined the wagon train, and was about to leave it when captured; my only baggage was a valise, which was packed on a mule, and it contained no specie. The few thousand dollars of specie were in a pair of saddle-bags belonging to Secretary Reagan. Whether that money ever reached the United States Treasury Mr. Reagan, from whom it was taken, may be able to learn after he shall have assumed his functions as a Representative in the United States Congress. Should the course of the commanding general of the army, in attempting at this late day to resuscitate a defunct slander against the President of the late Confederacy, and to which slander not even suborned witnesses could give the semblence of truth, be taken as the exponent of the feeling of the army, that arm of the general government would seem to be illsuited to the task, of late so largely assigned to it, of preserving civil order and of restoring harmony among the people of the United States. For that the ineradicable unlightly of thoroughly equip now those noble Universities, which in times past accomplished so much for the good of the country." prevailing sentiments of the United | much for the good of the country."

States army.

Again thanking you for your friendnot be overestimated. To remedy ly consideration, I am very truly JEFFERSON DAVIS.

Mrs. Tilton's Confessions. [New York Sun.]

The facts in regard to the confessions made by Mrs. Tilton to Mr. Joseph H. Richards, late the publisher of the Nation, and previously of the Independent, and to his wife, which the Sun published on Friday, forcibly present a conclusive reason why the counsel of Mr. Beecher would not call to the stand the woman with whom Beecher is accused of having trans-

The fact of Mrs. Tilton's confession to Mr. and Mrs. Richards is indisputable. It is also indisputable that she made to Miss Susan B. Anthony a confession even more detailed and explicit. She also acknowledged to Mrs. Bradshaw the truth of her alleged adulterous intercourse with Beecher. But so morally perverted is this hapless woman that the offence she confessed seemed to her to have no moral stain. Beecher was to her the representative of God, or Christ rather, incapable of sin, and their confessed adultery seems to have taken on for the time in her morbid thought and emotion, a spiritual character, which such a paramour as she said she had would be likely to assist her in giving it. Her conscience seems to have asserted itself at times, but never sufficiently to enable her to see the real blackness of the crime she acknowledged.

When Beecher was charged with the outrage by her husband, she, so again put herself under the former's influence and shield him at any expense. Her argument and his would be readily at hand. In Beecher's person religion would be attacked, Christ would receive another blow from his enemies, and Plymouth church, which she loved, would be blown into pieces. Yet though she took back her confession to her husband, in her weakness she still kept on confessing to others, and feebly trying to excuse her inculpated paramour. It is a dreadful thought, that of the moral wreck of this feeble woman, now denying now confessing, praying for help to do right, thinking God smiled on her lies, feeling that the church had its only support in her denials of the truth, and yet gaining momentary satisfaction for a conscience not entirely seared, by tearful exposures of her sin to friends in whom she trusted, finding consolation in religious easuistry, which came only to fail he in the end, and all this while the dreadful fact and its threatened exposure staring her in the face. Here is material for romance beside which even the Scarlet Letter will seem a tame analysis of a soul tortured, pursued by evil imaginings and indulging in vain subterfuges, mingling religion with the arts of the devil, and seeking to gain support for lies persisted in, by cries and prayers to the Divine Author of truth;

If we believe that she really made these confessions, as we must, Mrs. Tilton's appearance and conduct during the trial of Beecher were among the saddest things upon which a court of justice has ever looked. The testimony she gave before the church committee in secrecy, and with the aid of an apparent purpose on the part of its members to shield the pastor at any hazard, was bad enough. The daily appearance of the self-deceived, vilely used woman in the court room to confront the eyes of the world and those of the man whom she had confessed to having received in the arms of adulterous love, was simply horrible. And yet one spark of decency appeared in her. She did not come to hear his dramatic denials of adultery. Guilty or innocent, speaking the truth, or the victim of strange delusion, this woman is now a moral cast away. She has so blinded her perceptions of truth by false conceptions of duty, that she has lied to or of her husband, against or for Beecher, and all under declared duress of Tilton, or to save at the cost of Tilton the paramour who befouled her and his sacred calling. Which theory is the concocted the adultery and made her confess it to him, and when away from him to women friends, or that the pastor debauched her person and then ruined her soul in order that he might escape earthly punishment for offences against which the Divine Justice has thundered out His most
