The following semi-humorous article in the New York Journal of Commerce has been on our table several days: THE NEWEST THING FOR FARMERS.—It takes American ingenuity to put pure science to practical use.

When Dr. Darwin wrote his learned work on "Insectivorous Plants," he made it a point to mention the "sundew" of the Wilmington (N. C.) State the long sought sovereign remedy for the wildest pest that devours our crops.

In his book the naturalist describes these curious varieties of plants that catch insects and live upon them. His careful observations and many experiments leave no doubt that this is the function of the "sundew," "Venus fly trap," and others of the family.

The "sundew" is an innocent looking little weed, with round-shaped leaves symmetrically arranged about the stem. These are covered with bright drops of sticky fluid which sparkle in the sunlight and make a thing of beauty to the beholder.

But that which delights the eye of man is death to the insect world. The fly, spider, beetle or butterfly. He lights on the leaf to sip the seeming nectary he might as well have stepped into prepared glue, for when he tries to rise, his feet are firmly held by the viscid substance, his wings become entangled, and to make sure of him a quantity of hair-like filaments, with which the leaf is covered, automatically close about him, rendering his power complete.
