

NEW SONG TO AN OLD TUNE.

Oh, listen to the water mill, through all the living day—
Your salary will slip about the time you lose your pay.

Friday, P. M., June 17, 1881.—
The movement of the crop, as indicated by our telegrams from the South to-night, is given below.

The exports for the week ending the evening reach a total of 40,140 bales, of which 28,363 went to Great Britain, 6,172 to France, and 5,605 to rest of the Continent, while the stocks as made up this evening are now 399,984 bales.

The population in cotton for future delivery has been moderately active for the week under review. Prices have been variable. Wednesday opened weak and very dull; but on the appearance of the report of the Agricultural Bureau, estimating that the area planted for the next crop is less than one per cent, greater than last year, there was an advance of 7 @ 11 points from the lowest figures, followed by a reaction, until only a slight advance for the next crop was maintained, with August closing slightly lower. Yesterday there was a material decline for July, August and September, with general depression. To-day there was a further decline of 8 to 12 points, the depression being due to the continued favorable weather reports from nearly every important section of the cotton belt. Cotton on the spot was in moderate demand for export and home consumption, and prices remained unchanged. The market closed quiet at 11-1/2 for middling uplands.

The Congressional Commission, of which Hon. John W. Johnston is chairman, and Col. John S. Tucker is secretary, is busily engaged in perfecting the arrangements of the celebration.

THE YORCKOWA BATTLE.
The liberal action of Congress, the prompt action of the French Republic, and the widespread interest among the people indicate that the celebration will prove a vast success.

THE MEETING WILL BE CALLED TO ORDER by Hon. John W. Johnston, of Virginia, chairman of the Congressional Commission.

Music by a quartet and chorus of one hundred voices.

Introductory remarks by Mr. Johnston.

Address of Welcome by Governor Hilday, of Virginia.

Laying of the corner-stone of the monument by Peyton S. Coles, Esq., Grand Master of the Masons of the State of Virginia, assisted by the Grand Masters of the twelve other original States.

Address by the President of the United States.

Oration by Hon. Robert C. Winthrop, of Massachusetts.

Poem by James Barron Hope, of Virginia.

Ode by Paul H. Hayne, Esq., of Georgia.

Jefferson Davis's Defense.

One does not need to sympathize with his ideas, or to admire the course to which they led, in order to grasp, with eager curiosity, the opportunity to examine his vindication of himself and of them. Reason as we may with hair-splitting logic over the technicalities of constitutional law; divide as we choose the responsibility for the thousands of graves in the soldiers' cemeteries that blot so many landscapes on both sides of the line; recall we with pleasure or pain the memory of the apple tree at Appomattox Court House—we must still feel the keenest interest in a frank statement by the Southern President of the causes which, from his standpoint, rendered secession a necessity and justified the men who fought so long and so well to maintain it as a right.

SIXTEEN YEARS have passed since the famous cause was lost; and the plea now filed in its defense is entitled to the respectful consideration due to an argument patiently and exhaustively elaborated by an advocate of unquestionable sincerity.

Mr. Davis, indeed, would have been inconceivable if he had neglected the task he has just finished. He occupies a position unique in recent history, if we disregard the turbulent records of the pseudo Republics in South America; he is the only President who has seen his government blotted out and his constituency absorbed into a stronger. There hangs about him a romantic interest; no excited autocrat can ever claim, for he was not driven away by the people, but violently and against their will, attested by their blood, deposed from his authority over them. Many of them regard him with very mixed feelings; it dawns upon them with daily increasing distinctness that it was well they failed in their attempt to establish a new republic for themselves; and close consideration has made them doubt whether, having decided to make trial of this scheme, they acted with supreme judiciousness in the selection of their leaders. One hears not uncommonly in the South sharp criticism of Mr. Davis and many details of his policy; nor do the strictures by any means invariably proceed from that naturally large class whose personal ambitions were crossed by his arrangements, or whose interests suffered in the carrying out of his plans. They often drop from disinterested lips, and are backed by logic of pertinence and force. And yet, be it frankly avowed, the best citizen of Dixie is like the butler in Goldsmith's play, and will suffer no one else to abuse the master; so that not a sword but shall leap from his scabbard in his defense, if he be deposed by any presumptuous carper who was on the other side of the four years' controversy. Mr. Davis is perhaps destined to be judged ultimately as much on the merits of his production as with reference to his public acts. Certainly, the task of placing on record the narrative of his administration, involving as it does a final and authoritative appeal for a much-traded community to the calmer judgment of civilization, was one of no less dignity and consequence than anything he was called upon to undertake during the Presidential term.

A WARM RECEPTION.
The outward bound stage line was stopped by two masked men about twenty miles southwest from here, about noon yesterday. They advanced with guns aimed at the driver, Pete Donnell, and both shot at they called to him to halt. Charles McConkey, one of the proprietors of the stage line, and W. H. Berry, a passenger, were on top of the stage near the driver. On seeing the desperadoes they drew their Winchester and fired, downing both robbers. One lay still but the other raised three times, trying to shoot the driver, but was quieted by a second ball from McConkey's gun. McConkey then fastened a piece of paper on one of them on which was written: "A failure on the part of the stage robbers." The stage being full the robbers were left as they fell, and the stage was driven to Black Range to-day.

THE TRIAL OF COL. CASH FOR KILLING COL. SHANNON IN A DUEL—THE JUDGE'S CHARGE TO THE JURY—VERDICT OF NOT GUILTY RENDERED.
(By Telegraph to the Morning Star.)
CHARLESTON, June 21.—A special from Des Moines says the trial of E. B. C. Cash, who killed W. M. Shannon in a duel, was begun here to-day. The evidence for the State was the same as on the previous trial. The defense put forward Col. Shannon's second, who testified that there had been no effort at a compromise on his part. Col. Cash was placed on the stand and said that he had wanted to fight Shannon, but that he had been prevented by the State. Judge Cochran then charged the jury that the crime of which the prisoner stood accused was murder, the essence of which is malice. The killing was admitted, and the jury must decide if there was a formal design to take the life of the deceased. It has been argued that because the law has been allowed to sleep, it has no force. This is not so. The law has never been abrogated. It is alleged that this duel was fought, but self-defense is no plea when one has a purpose. The offense cannot be condoned because Shannon participated in it. The killing in a duel is murder, and the penalty is death. After reading the testimony, and again charging the jury as to their duty in the case, the Judge closed and the jury withdrew. They will probably be out all night.

CHARLESTON, June 22.—At a late hour last night the jury in the Cash duelling case returned a verdict of not guilty.

TO BE SHOT AT SIX.

THE MELANCHOLY FATE OF A FRENCH WAR CORRESPONDENT AT TUNIS—FROM THE BALL ROOM TO THE PLACE OF EXECUTION.

From the French of Albert Millaud.
A terrible example has been made in Tunis. One of the special correspondents attached to the expedition now in the field against the Krommars was Camille Farcy, well known as a brilliant writer. He had long been connected with La France, one of the leading journals. The army which he was detailed to follow was that of Gen. Foregomol. This officer is a martinet, and entertains the most rigid ideas regarding discipline. Before the expedition left Algiers he, in conjunction with Gen. Vinocendou, concocted the following pledge, which all the journalists were obliged to sign: I, _____, promise upon my honor to transmit no information whatever, either by telegraph or by mail, or by any other means, without first having submitted my manuscript to the examination of the officer commanding the expedition, or to such officer or officers as he may delegate that power to. I further agree that any failure to keep this pledge will expose me to the rigors of martial law.

This document was signed by all the correspondents attached to the expedition. When Farcy's turn came he took the pen, but it was with evident reluctance that he signed. When he had done so he said to Foregomol: "General, I sign this document only because I am forced to do so; because without doing so I could not fulfill my duty as a correspondent; because without doing so I could not accompany the expedition. But I warn you, sir, that I shall speak the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth touching such matters as may come under my observation." And with a defiant glance at the general Camille withdrew. The old general gnawed his grizzled moustache to conceal his wrath. He did what perhaps most men would have done. He set a spy to watch the footsteps of Farcy. The expedition was successful. Two evenings after the spy detected the journalist, under a disguise, quitting the camp. He followed and saw him deposit a large envelope in one of the minor post-offices upon the Algerian frontier. He was at once arrested and conducted to Foregomol's headquarters.

"Ah!" said the general, "at it already, my fine fellow. Well, what have you here?" and he seized and broke open the envelope. "Hum—addressed to La France. Evidently some correspondence which you are sending without my knowledge."
"Yes, General," said Farcy, calmly. "Let us see what it is."
"General," said Farcy, coldly, "permit me to remind you that you are violating private correspondence."
"Private correspondence? Bah!" retorted Foregomol. "Very private, indeed; all Paris would know it in another day," and he resumed his reading.
There were some severe strictures in the letter upon the conduct of the campaign. Foregomol's trending was interrupted by oaths, and when he finished he was purple with wrath.

"So," said he, grimly, "you consider yourself competent to judge of the operations of a general in the field, do you? Well, sir, you shall have a taste of martial law to add to your knowledge of military affairs."

Farcy disdained to defend himself. A court-martial was immediately convened. Its proceedings were summary—its sentence short: "Camille Farcy is condemned to be shot at 6 in the morning."

It was then midnight. The doomed man was placed in charge of a lieutenant and a squad of soldiers, put upon a special train, and was borne swiftly to the capital city, Algiers, where the execution was to take place.

At 5:30 o'clock the train dashed into the city. It passed under the walls of the palace where Albert Grevy, the governor general, lives in state. The windows were brightly lighted and the strains of a waltz were borne to the ears of the prisoner. The governor was giving a ball.

"You have half an hour in which to prepare for death," said the lieutenant, compassionately; "would you like to have me send for a priest?"

"I suppose," said Farcy, "you will grant my request?"

"Then let me go to the ball. I would like to have a waltz before I die."

The officer bowed and repaired to M. Grevy's palace.

"His request shall be granted," said the President's brother. "Who could refuse a dying man's request? Bring him here; he shall dance with my daughter."

And it was done. The last moments of his life were spent upon a ball-room floor.

At 6 o'clock the officer spoke: "The file is waiting," said he.

"Let us go," said Farcy. He saluted the dancers and withdrew. When he reached the ground where the file was awaiting him he refused to allow his eyes to be bandaged, and demanded permission to give the word of command.

"May all journalists do as I have done," said he; "it is their duty." Then folding his arms he cried: "Fire!"

The crack of the muskets rang out on the morning air. Camille Farcy fell dead, pierced with balls. The vengeance of Gen. Foregomol was accomplished.

The art connoisseur and exhibitor, Prof. Crowwell, was cured of rheumatism by St. Jacobs Oil.—Norfolk Virginian.
