THE TRIAL OF GUITEAU.

Wr. Scoville's Address to the Jury-He Claims to be no Orator, but Would Address Himself to the Intellect of the Jury.

[By Telegraph to the Morning Star.]

WASHINGTON, January 16,-The Court

opened at 10.10 this morning. Mr. Scoville began his address to the jury by confessing his unfamiliarity with the modes of practice in criminal cases, which had resulted in his making numerous mis-takes which had undoubtedly militated against the prisoner. He desired, however, publicly to acknowledge and return thanks or the assistance he had received from numbers of the bar here and in other parts of the country-assistance cheerfully and voluntarily rendered-and which had very materially aided him in conducting the de-fence. All the defence asked for was a fair, candid, impartial weighing of the evi-dence by fair and candid men. Counsel vould attempt no oratory, because he was not equal to it, and because he would not to it if he could. He would address himelf to the intellect of the jury. Oratory, eloquence and appeals to the passions he would leave for counsel who would follow him (Judge Porter); and he desired to warn them that in the effort of the learned counsel (Judge Porter) to expound the law or explain the evidence he would invariably seek to influence them through their emotions-to touch their hearts and sway their sympathies, rather than to convince their judgments. The speaker dwelt upon the seriousness of the duty devoiving upon the gentlemen of the jury in arriving at a fair and impar-tial verdict, and explained the reasons for he care particularly observed by the court a selecting jurors. Counsel upon either side would insensibly add coloring to suit their particular views, and though each might be honest, yet counsel upon oppsite les would naturally take opposite views of the case, and in listening to and reading over some evidence each would catch points which would seem to make for their respective sides. As a consequence, in pre-senting them to the jury tinged with the coloring of their (counsel's) preconceived opinions, neither would in reality present the whole truth. Mr. Scoville complimented the fairness, honesty and integrity of counel, Mr. Davidge, who has opened the rgument for the prosicution, and then roceeded to show, owing to causes he had hst set forth, how unfair, partial and dishonest Mr. Davidge's comments upon a recoville said, "I do not care to complain, although I do not think that as counsel in the conduct of this case I have been treated with fairness. Personally I care nothing for it, but when it injures the case in which my efforts are enlisted then I must complain. hold in my hand an indictment for conpiracy, which I have framed in my own nind, and the object of this conspiracy mind, and the object of this conspiracy was to hang the prisoner." Mr. Scoville proceeded to name the conspirators—the District Attorney, Judge Porter, Mr. Da-vidge and five of the government experts, namely, Drs. Gray, Hamilton, Kempler, McDonald and Wooster. Apologizing for the transgression, Mr. Scoville said: "The abit of newspapers of anticipating proesses of our courts and law and complainng against the tardiness of judical deciions is a most pernicious one, and antaconizes the very results they may be clam-oring for." Said Mr. Scoville, "The counts n this indictment, twenty in number, are First, they have perverted the law in this ease." Mr. Scoville in illustration or support of this count, alluded to the introduction by Judge Porter of the decision of Judge Davis. He said: "Counsel upon the other side indignantly repudiated the sugrestion that Judge Davis sat with Cardozo or Barnard, but I have yet to learn if either of them ever committed a more reprehensible act than that of Judge Davis." Mr. Scoville warmed up with the subject, and denounced in severe language the extra ju-dicial act of Judge Davis. Mr. Scoville continued: "When Judge Porter comes be fore this jury and undertakes to pervert evidence I shall not keep quiet as I did with Mr. Drvidge, but I shall stop him." Guiteau-"So shall I." Mr. Scoville-"I shall stop him and I shall correct him if I find he is misstating the evidence.' Guiteau-"Never mind: I'll attend to Judge Porter-"There will be two Guiteaus then to aftend to me." Mr. Scoville at some length reviewed those portions of Mr. Davidge's argument in which the law of the case was stated, and claimed that it was falsely stated in every instance; that it was well termed by counsel "the iron rule," for it would hang four-fifths of the insane criminals of the country. I can only express my surprise that gentlemen of the learning and experirience possessed by the counsel for the prosecution can so state , it, unless there be a wilful perversion of facts. The prosecution state it, "if the prisoner knew the act was wrong on the 2nd of July then he should hang." Now this is not by any means the whole of it or a correct statement of the law. The Court has added in substance as follows: "Yet if in this act he was overpowered by conscious-ness coming through his diseased mind that what he was doing was necessary for fence-He Compliments Messrs, Reed and Scoville, but Denies that Either of Them Represent Him in the Be-fence-Mr. Scoville's Speech Contin-ued-Complaint as to the Unfairness of the Prosecution.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 17.—When the Court opened, with the permission of Judge Cox, Guiteau said: "I have written down what I wish to say, and I will read it. "Tis in regard to my speech." He then read with considerable emphasis:

considerable emphasis: "I intend no disrespect to this honorable Court. I intend no controversy with this honorable Court. In general, I am satis-fied with the law as proposed by your Ho-nor, but I have suggested a still broader view, which I ask your Honor to allow, to view, which I ask your Honor to allow, to wit, that if the jury believe that I believed it was right to remove the President, be-cause I had special Divine authority so to do, and was forced to do it by the Deity, they will acquit on the ground of transi-tory mania. Sickles, McFarland and History mania. Sickles, McFarland and His-cock were acquitted on the ground of tran sitory mania. In my speech published in all of the leading American papers, yester-day, and which I presume your Honor has read, I gave my reasons for asking your Honor so to charge. Mr. Reed made a brilliant and lawyer-like plea for the de-fence, and Mr. Scoville is making a strong argument for his theory, but neither Mr. Reed nor Mr. Scoville represent me in this defence. I am here as my own counthis defence. I am here as my own coun-sel, and, as stated at the opening of the case, no one can represent me to that jury. I know my feelings and my inspiration in removing the President, and I have set it-forth to my satisfaction in my speech pub-lished yesterday; and I ask your Honor, in the name of justice, in the name of the American people, to allow me to address a jury of my countrymen when my life may be at stake. If a man on that jury has a doubt as to his duty in acquitting me, my speech will probably settle him in my favor, and, therefore, in the interest of jus-tice it is of the greatest importance that this defence. I am here as my own coun-

tice it is of the greatest importance that they hear me in my defence. Your Honor can decide the matter if you have any doubt as to your duty." Mr. Scoville began with a general com-plaint of alleged unfairness on the part of the prosecution, particularly of the prose-cuting attorney. He had from the begin-ning prescribed who should visit the jail, and who should not. He had introduced persons into the prisoner's cell, under a false guise, to worm out his secrets, and when the prisoner said anything which might inure to his benefit the prosecuting attorney had been very careful not to let it become known. He complained of Mr. Corkhill's unfairness in destroying the notes of Stenographer Bailey so that the defence could not have the benefit of them.

Mr. Scoville said that the conduct of the prosecution was not only unfair to the defence, but often discourteous and more befitting a police court than this Court. He then gave his views of Judge Porter and in-structed the jury how much weight they should attach to his utterances. Mr. Scoville commenced a review of the life of the prisoner and continued up to the adjournment.

jury, to take up this feature of the case, but when I find the power and influence of this government used against me in deny-ing me the small pittance that I have asked -a fair and impartial trial and the small facilities needed for a proper defence -I do not propose to keep quiet. I say that such men as Grant and Conkling and Arthur are morally and intellectually responsible for this crime. Conkling shall not escape; he shall not shirk the responsibility of the state of things that led to this act; he shall not escape the condemnation of the American people, if I can help it, for his share in the disgraceful scramble for office that led to the conflict with the chosen ruler of this the conflict with the chosen ruler of this great nation, and led this poor insane man to compass what they would have halled with satisfaction, and as would probably hundreds of other politicians, if it could occur other than through assassination, the removal of Garfield, who stood in the way of their unrighteous and disgraceful struggle for office. Neither shall Grant escape that condemnation to which he is so justly subjected, when, coming from Mexico, and coming with undue haste, he threw his own name into the petty quarrel about a small office in the Republican party, and sought to foment the differences that had sprung up. I am not going to see the misdeeds of these men, high in power, visited upon the head of this poor insane man, if I can help it. This clamor for his blood is not for the purpose of avenging Garfield, or of satis-fying justice, but their theory is this: If it can be shown that this was the act of a sanc man, then those politicians in high places will say, 'Of course we are not re-sponsible for the act of a sanc man. To be sure we had some differences, but then it could never have led a sane man to do such an act.' But, on the contrary, gentlemen of the jury, what is the effect of your verdict if you acquit him as an insane man? Mr. Scoville's denunciation of Conkling and Arthur created a profound sensation in the court room. As soon as the recess was announced Mr. Scoville was sur-rounded by ladies and gentlemen, and con-gratulated upon his "fearless exposition." One gentleman exclaimed: "That's the correct sentiment, and four-fifths of the American people are with you on that." the good of the country and was specially approved by God, then you cannot convict him of murder." Continuing, Mr. Scoville said: "The second count in the indict-The recess hour was enlivened by several heated discussions in the corridors and upon by Mr. Scoville.
