AN IDYL OF "SINKIN' MOUNT'IN.

By HARRY STILLWELL EDWARDS.

[Copyright, 1893, by The Century Company. All rights reserved.] CHAPTER I.

Ezekiel Obadiah Sykes leaned over the tumble down split picket fence that had once kept the pigs and chickens from his mother's hamble flower garden and gazed fixedly at the mountain before him. His was not a striking figure, being lank and somewhat round shouldered. It was not even picturesque. A pair of worn jean trousers covered his lower limbs and were held in place by knit "galluses," which crossed the back of his cotton shirt exactly in the middle and disappeared over his shoulders in well defined grooves. A stained and battered wool hat hung like a bell over his head, which rested by his chin upon a red, rough hand. The face was half covered by a reddish brown beard, the first of his budding manhood.

The sun had just sunk beyond the mountain, and the great shadow that crept across the single field of starving corn and the tobacco patch deepened into twilight, and still the young man rested on the picket fence. Occasionally he would eject into the half defined road, which came around one side of the mountain and disappeared around the other, a stream of tebacco juice and pensively watch it as it lined the gravel and vanished into the soil with something like a human gasp. Once he lifted a bare foot and with a prolonged effort scratched with its horny toes the calf of the supporting leg. But , by no motion did he dissipate the air of listlessness and despondency that hung about him. Fortune had not smiled upon the Sykes family for many moons. There were no pigs to disturb the flower garden overrun with prince's feathers. bachelor's buttons, four o'clocks, old maids and sunflowers, and the dismounted gate leaned restfully against the post on which it had once hung. Somehow everything in the neighborhood of the Sykes cottage seemed inclined to lean toward something else. The cow was long gone, and the tiny little boarded shed, which straddled the sparkling spring branch near at hand and served once as a dairy, was lurching toward the hillside.

Near the staggering fence was a bench that had settled back against it, thrusting its legs well to the front, and there once nestled a score of beehives, but none remained, and only the great yellow and marcon butterflies that floated down the valley and the bumblebees reveled in the honey flowers. Perhaps the influence of these facts weighed upon the young man's mind and cast a shadow darker than the mountain's. Certainly as he leaned sciently over the picket he was in harmony with the surroundings. A girl came out into the twilight of the little porch, where vines were clambering pellmell up a rough trellis of peeled rods, and carefully poured water from a gourd into a dozen tiny pots along the edge. The pots consisted of gourds and of tin caus that had been brought home by Ezekiel from the refuse of the great hotels at The Falls, 10 miles or more away. But they answered her purposes well, only they presented a somewhat incongruous appearance, for on several from which bloomed lovely geraniums-cuttings secured by Ezekiel from character studying ladies at the same hotels-flamed great red tomatoes. and where little sprigs of coleus beamed in the shadow shone also phenomenal asparagus and the violent hued lobster. The dress of the girl was a well worn neat checked homespun, and at the throat was a bit of faded ribbon. "D'rindy, yuh seen Ezekiel?" An eldderly woman in homespun of the same design as the girl's stood in the doorway that led from the kitchen upon the porch, holding a coffeepot in hand. "No, ma'am. Zeke! Oh-h-h-h, Zeke!" The girl lifted her head and sung out the name until the mountain and the valley gave it back again and again. "What yuh warnt, D'rindy?" The voice came from so close at hand in the gathering shadows as to startle her. "Well, I d'clar' ter goodness' sakes, Ezekiel, what yuh doin out thar?"

"Nuth'n. dens and diminishing income, but not to eat the bread of idleness. Never had mother a tenderer daughter, never an orphan a better mother. Zeke had been her one playmate and protector, and the little room, built when she grew older. was the result of his rough carpentry. "I wunner ef he es er-frettin 'bout

Sal Boler gittin j'ined?" she asked herself. The romance was familiar to her in all its parts from the day when Ezekiel was smitten until faithless Sal wedded a stranger from beyond the mountain, and he sunk back into despair and silence. She stood up before a little fragment of glass and looked at herself. It was a tiny room indeed, but marvelous in its appointments. The bare boards were frescoed with autumn leaves, their tints making a glory in the half lit place. Clusters of chestnut burrs garnished with them hung around, and here and there, in scraped cow horns thrust into crevices, were tucked great bunches of ferns and scarlet berries and goldenrod. A half dozen cheap prints cut from periodicals picked up at The Falls filled the waste places, and festoons of bead corn linked them together. But just above her glass was a cheap photograph of Zeke, taken years before in the mountains by a straggling photographer whom he had guided, representing him, as he had seen the romantic tourist, posing in the shadow of a rock, his hat in one hand, and the other, for want of a coat, thrust into his half open shirt front-a barefooted mountain boy whose honest eves looked straight into hers. This had been, from the day Ezekiel brought it home, the treasure of her girlhood. The frame about it was like none other in the world. It was of mica, made of sheets larger than any man's hand, and upon their surface with a needle she had traced ferns, butterflies, flowers and leaves, rubbing soot into the lines to make the figures stand forth. This was her gem, and once a traveling artist who gazed upon it said that it was wonderfully true to nature and offered to buy it. He might as well have bartered for her eyes. The little room held only her couch, a rude chest, a splint rocker and less expenditure, by more promptly adapting the world's best products to the needs of physical being, will attest the value to health of the pure liquid laxative principles embraced in the remedy, Syrup of Figs. Its excellence is due to its presenting in the form most acceptable and pleasant to the taste, the refreshing and truly beneficial properties of a perfect laxative; effectually cleansing the system, dispelling colds, headaches and fevers and permanently curing constipation. It has given satisfaction to millions and met with the approval of the medical profession, because it acts on the Kid-neys, Liver and Bowels without weakening them and it is perfectly free from every objectionable substance. Syrup of Figs is for sale by all druggists in 50c and $1 bottles, but it is man-ufactured by the California Fig Syrup

Co. only, whose name is printed on every package, also the name, Syrup of Figs, and being well informed, you will not accept any substitute if offered. ap 26 D&W 19 4thp

Dorinda turned and went out as silently as she came. In her room she threw herself face down upon the log cabin quilt of her couch and sobbed herself asleep.

CHAPTER II.

When Ezekiel Sykes arose next morning responsive to his mother's call, daylight was glimmering faintly on the mountain. He took from its pegs his red jean suit, the same that Sal Boler had so often seen him in, now a little worse for wear, and donned it, putting on his one other cotton shirt. Then he slicked his hair with marrowfat from a horn, and throwing his boots, well greased, across his shoulder rolled up his trousers. Prepared for his journey, he proceeded to the kitchen and possessed himself of a cup of cold coffee and the bread put aside for him. As he was passing out his mother came to the
