American Antiquities.—From unanswerable facts and statistics it is evident (says a writer in the Cleaveland Plaindealer) that the great valleys and brave—descendants of those mighty nations to whom I have alluded, and who settled in this country long before the appearance of the Saviour on the earth. Near Lexington, Kentucky, are the remains of an ancient catacomb formed in a solid rock of limestone. This curiosity was discovered in the year 1776 by the early settlers of that country. The mouth of the cavern was carefully concealed with stones, which, on being removed, opened into a cave of immense magnitude. The sides of this spacious apartment were found, upon examination, to be cut into niches or compartments, occupied by figures representing men. By further investigation these figures were discovered practised by that people three thousand four hundred and seventy-five years previous to this discovery in Kentucky. The catacomb was capable of miles below Wabash river, another remarkable work of antiquity. It is a very large cave, with smooth perpendicular walls and a level floor. The walls are covered with hieroglyphic figures cut in solid stone, and are well executed. Among them are representations of animals unknown to the present generation. This cave is one of the greatest curiosities on the Ohio, and is connected with a dark dismal cavern, nearly the same size. which is located directly above it, and which is

When we view the ancient mounds and tumuli of the West we are lost in wonder, in view of the number, magnitude, and obscurity of their origin. There are several hundreds of these works in the valley of the Ohio and Mississippi rivers, and some of them are found to be filled with human skeletons, indicating that they were a place of deposite of the dead; they also bear the appearance of having been contiguous to some large and populous city. Many strange and curious antiquities have been from time to time exhumed from these mounds; and is it not significant that, in a great majority of instances, there exists a remarkable resemblance between these relics found in the nineteenth century and articles which were Market value known to have been used against the Romans; Grecians, and Egyptians before the days of Christ?

How Milton Spent the Day .- At his meals he quor. Although not fastidious in his tood, yet his taste seems to have been delicate and refined like his other senses, and he had a preference for such viands as were of an agreeable flavor. In his early years he used to sit up late at his stuwhile his sight was good; but in his latter years till four in summer and five in winter, and if not disposed then to rise, he had some one to sit at his bedside and read to him. When he rose he had a chapter of the Hebrew Bible read for him, and then, with of course the intervention of terwards played on the organ or bass-viol, and All losses are punctually paid within 50 days after satisfactory proof is presented.

Toast and Water .- Pope, on one occasion, experienced a very ludicrous disappointment at Mr. Shee's table, in Cavendish square. The port and claret were making their accustomed rounds during the dessert-probably at an exemplary pace. Mr. Shee, although little short of a teetolaler himsalary of $50 per month and expenses. Business perdeparture of the ladies. So far all was well; but at each successive circuit of the ambulatory "consters" Pope's observant eye detected the suspicious fact that his host, though prompt to expedite their rotary progress, never had recourse to their contents, but occasionally, and, as it seemed, rather surreptitiously, helped himself from a small, un-obtrusive decanter that remained stationary at his right hand, and through the clear crystal of which shone a bright amber-colored liquid, suggestive of the purest Amontillado vintage. Eager to defeat and expose so inhospitable a monopoly, Pope suddenly apostrophized his host in loud and jeering tones, "Come, come, my good friend, I perceive that you are nursing something good there for your own private drinking. That decantor has never left your side. But it won't do! I'll trouble you for a glass." "Oh! willingly," answered his Amphitryon, in apparent confusion "I was just about to ask your opinion of it." And, suiting the action to the word, he poured out a bumper into the glass which Pope's eager hand extended for the purpose. The winuphant connoisseur raised the sparkling goblet to the light, and then drained the contents at a single draught. But no sooner had he done so than a loud exclamation of horror and dismay burst from his lips, while his face wore an expression of the deepest disgust. "By Jove!" exclaimed he, sputtering in his finger-glass, "it's-it's-nothing but
