In a country like ours, blessed with every thing to make life pleasant, and possessing a proper soil and climate for every plant, -why, otherwise so favored, should man be deprived of the real essence of life. Wine? True, this incomparable nectar is not altogether un-known here, for many thousand American Eagles of gold cross the Atlantic annually to bring it to us; but this privilege is attainable only by a few; while the mass of the people may not receive this best gift of nature. Substitutes have been invented, by drugs and poisonous substitutes; but they are poor indeed, compared to genuine Wine, which makes a man social, contented and happy; while those mixtures and drugs, at once exciting and stupefying, demoralize him. As Wine is a pure beverage which nature furnishes, its use should be attainable to every one. While it inspirits the youth to all that is fair, good, moral, and grand, it stimulates him in his labor and occupation; makes him a brave husband, father and citizen; and brightens the evening of old age. As Wine has so beneficial an influence on the nature and character of the individual, it will likewise exalt the condition of a whole people. Consequently there is reason why we should exert ourselves to introduce the general culture of the Grape in our own country, as it has been done for centuries in other lands. December, 1860.
