

STATE TREASURER'S REPORT. We have received a pamphlet copy of the Report of the Public Treasurer, Jonathan Worsh, Esq., a document of unusual importance. Much of his information as to the receipts and disbursements, we have already seen in the portion of the Comptroller's Report, published by the Treasurer. He tells us, in his numerous tables, and his own views and observations. The latter we state, and condense the former.

City of Raleigh, 48,000
Raleigh and Gaston Railroad Company, 100,000
Debt of Atlantic and N. C. R. R. Company, 400,000 for loan under act of 1859, 52,618 00
Also, an unliquidated claim against the Confederate government, supposed to amount to about $1,000,000. The $1,000,000 sent to Europe, as collateral security of cotton debt, in arriving at the real indebtedness of the State, should not be considered as a debt, because the State owns cotton, supposed to be sufficient to pay the debt.

In this connection it should also be borne in mind that the Commissioners of the Sinking Fund hold State stocks to the amount of $1,519,000, and Confederate 7 per cent bonds to the amount of $300,000, and besides the interest accruing on this Fund, it is being rapidly increased by dividends from Railroads.

THE BATTLE OF MISSIONARY RIDGE FOR THE OBSERVER. CAMP 58TH AND 60TH N. C. REGTS., (CONSOLIDATED.) Reynolds' Brigade, Dalton, Ga., Dec 3, 1863.

FROM GENERAL BRAGO'S ARMY. RESACA, Ga., Nov. 30, 1863. We extract the following encouraging views from an article in the Mobile News: When Gen. Butler was removed from New Orleans and Banks was sent to take his place, the latter brought fifteen or twenty thousand men with him. With these, and the small fragment of Butler's army, he was expected to reduce Port Hudson, to occupy Alexandria, and to overtake most of the sugar-producing portion of the State. He succeeded by the aid of the most powerful artillery in the world, and the loss of the majority of his men. He entered Alexandria only to fall back, after a few days, with the loss of 23,000 men. He was ordered to make an expedition to Mobile and capture it. He was ordered to capture it, with the loss of 23,000 men. He was ordered to capture it, with the loss of 23,000 men.

THE RICHMOND SPIRIT. The Richmond Spirit says: That, in any event, we can wear the enemy out by endurance, and conquer freedom and peace by our superior manliness, as certain as the course of the seasons. The confidence that, while it "happeth all things," also "cometh all things," will infallibly bring us out victorious in the end. Our people have only to resolve, with the indomitable firmness of martyrs, that, come what may, they will never be slaves to Yankee masters, and that they will fight for them with the irresistible power of Fate. We have that faith in the insatiable Southern race which assures us that they will not bolt the pledges they have made to each other and to the world to invoke extermination sooner than submit. We are sure we can speak for the renewed Old Commonwealth of Virginia—which, as she took up the sword only when compelled to do so by the proclamation that made her a party to the war, and summoned her sons only when actual invasion was at hand—with never lay down the one nor disband the other while force is employed against her and the intruder's foot is on her soil. She counched the cud from the beginning—she expected to be swept over by the tide of war, and she looked for the first through the storm and beyond the flood, to the rainbow and dry land in the distance. She does not think of retreating. Untrifled and never to be subdued, she still looks, and will still look, with unflinching faith, to a day of vengeance and triumph. Till that day shall come, all the strength she has will be used in resistance, and all the fortitude she needs will show itself in endurance.
