

every man who is not infatuated must feel it, every man who is capable of contrasting our distresses with our present prosperity, must be anxious to support that government under which he sees his neighbours, and feels himself, flourishing, secure and happy.

GREENFIELD, August 7.

We have information as late as the 4th of July, from Gen. Wayne; this information comes by a vessel from Detroit to Fort Erie, and is brought to us by the Genesee post, who is direct from Canandaque—it states, that Gen. Wayne was advancing towards the rapids of the Miami, with all possible expedition—with intention, it was supposed, of routing the English from their establishment at that place.

The account adds, that the British are inviting and collecting the Indians from all quarters; at this rendezvous; many were already collected, and, in conjunction with the British, were anxiously waiting the approach of the Americans—to whom they were determined to give battle.

PHILADELPHIA, August 23.

By the post from the westward we learn that the commissioners sent by the government had met some delegation of the insurgents, who agree to appoint a committee of seven men to meet the commissioners at Pittsburgh, on the subject of their mission.

The building of a New Theatre on the spot occupied by the old one is in contemplation at New York. The edifice is to be erected by subscription; twelve thousand pounds the sum required, one hundred and fifty a share, consequently 80 subscribers will fill the subscription.

By the last accounts from the Westward we learn, that the insurgents in that quarter do not confine their views to an unlawful opposition to the empire, but aim at independence from the Atlantic shore. They will not be so mad, it is to be hoped, as to try to attain that object by the sword. A clear navigation of the Mississippi is another object with them.

It appears that our patriotic tars are exhibit what the British Minister will call their JACOBINICAL principles even under the nose of his Britannic Majesty. A London paper records that all the flags in the port of London were hoisted in honour of How's victory, except the American stripes.

There are reasons for believing that Citizen Van Dogen, once of the Concord, commanded the Revolutionnaire, in the late gallant action with the British 80 gun ship and five 74's.

By the late arrival at Boston from Amsterdam, letters have been received by a merchant in this city, from that place dated the 28th June, which state in substance, that the French are carrying all before them in Flanders—that universal consternations had seized on the inhabitants of the cities on the frontiers, and that the panic had reached even to the towns of the United Provinces; that the fugitives were flocking in such multitudes to Holland, that the cities were crowded with emigrants—It may therefore be safely presumed that nothing had occurred to check the career of the French successes as late as the 26th of June.

RUN away, on Thursday the 4th of this instant, a likely Negro fellow, about 5 feet 10 inches high, formerly the property of Silas Jurnagan, it is supposed he will be lurking about there; he is about 22 years old, very black; he had on when he went away a homespun shirt, and Oz-naburg trowsers, round hat, he has a cut on one of his ankles, with a chisel that is now sore. Any person that will secure him, so that I get him again, shall have five hard dollars, or if delivered to me in Newbern, ten dollars.
