Miscellany.

CHAPTER I. of the LAST BOOK OF KINGS.

Beginning at the downfall of the Babilon, and the treachery and defeat of the Swiss Guards.

1. IN those days there was a sore lamentation for their Kings; for the rulers put heavy task-masters over the people, and them who disobeyed the King's command were cast into prison, and their cry ascended up into Heaven.

2. And all the people assembled together, they mourned with a sore lamentation, and put on sack-cloth and ashes, and cried loudly to all the inhabitants of the regions round about.

3. And the men of war assembled themselves together, and proclaimed with a loud voice, we have no part in Louis, neither shall the Swifites have and inheritance amongst us.

4. And they rose together as one man, and tore down the strong-hill of confinement, and put their task-masters to death, and their king fled into another region bordering upon Galilee.

5. And when the people heard their king was not far off, they sent messengers, who kindly invited him to return to his own tribe, and they spoke comfortable unto him, and said,

6. Are we not thy bond-slaves, who have served thee in peace and in war, without hire; have we murmured against thy commands, or disobeyed thy decrees? Harken, then, to our voice, and do not leave us.

7. And the king swore to them, that day that he would not depart from them; that their kindred should be his kindred; that where they lodged, he would lodge; that their God should be his God, and that hereafter they would be one people.

8. But the kings of the neighbouring nations were wroth at the people who opposed their king; and the Britifites cut the councils of the Frenchites into twelve pieces and sent them to the Germanites, the Prutifanites, the Hanoverianites, the Swifites, the Aultrianites, the Spanifites, and the Ruffianites, a barbarous race of giantlike men, who inhabited the land on the other side of the mountain of reason, and to all the nations round about, and said, was there ever such a deed done to kings?

9. And they swore that they would not take rest, small nor great, until they had cut off from the face of the earth every Frenchite who pillaged against the wall; and moreover they came under a vow, that they would not give their sons to their daughters nor their daughters to their sons, for wives, but that they would pursue them in dens and caves, and cut their memory from off the face of the earth forever. And all the Britifites said Amen.

10. And behold when the Frenchites had heard the decree that passed in the neighbouring nations they laughed them to scorn; and they said, those are the sons of Anak the-giant, whose flesh we give to the fowls of the air.

11. And they called their old men and their young men from the east from the west, from the north and from the south, and said unto them, hear ye the decree that your enemies the Britifites have declared against you? and they all said, yea.

12. And La Brun, a champion of the Frenchites, spake and said, hear ye, all ye people. And they kept silence.—And he said, in the days of our forefathers this land was given to you in conquest from the heathen who had departed from the worship of the living god, and in his room paid adoration to stocks and stones.

13. And now what better are you, who in the place of one eternal, have exalted that whore, the Pope of Rome, above every thing that is called god; and ye give to him and his priests, that adoration that is due to God alone.

14. And all the people mourned until the going down of the Sun; and they swore one to another, that we will take no rest, night nor day, until Babilon the great be fallen, and Dagan, that oracle of war
