FLOWERS ON THE ALTAR.

The blossoms, Lord, more sweetly grow, That round Thy altar bud and blow, In this great calm, this heavenly air, Breathing devotion, love and prayer.

Dim is the light by shadows spun-Here, think you, pine they for the sun, Or rains of heaven, or dews of night, Or earth's sad sod to bloom more bright?

Oh no-for angels tend them here, They love the church's atmosphere, Blossoms so fragrant, earth's true gems,

Just dropt from seraph's diadems. So let the flowers live and grow,

And round His altar bud and blow,

The incense of their bloom to rise

With our faint prayers to Paradise. Cotton in the South.

There is a fair prospect that cotton raising will grow to be more and more the staple product of the South. For the past few years, the supply in this and other counties has not been equal to the demand. As long as emigrants pour in upon us as they are doing now, we must be thinking what we are going to do to clothe them. They come many of them with only a limited wardrobe, and they come where work is plenty, and where they can get ready money for their labor. They must be clothed, and the material must be raised at

Cotton factories are constantly being through the air to New York ! built, and through the South there should hundreds of them go up within the next five years and there will be factories enough in this country to manufacture every pound of cotton we can raise, without shipping any to foreign ports.

Then the precaution the planters should crowning "Queens of Love and Beauty." take, is not to neglect corn and stock entirely, but raise enough to keep the hands and let the rest go to cotton. It generally yields well, and the prices are bound to be remunerative. - New Berne Times.

A Hop Speculation. From the Detroit Post.

Some time ago, when hops were worth fully forty cents per pound, a firm here received on consignment about $1000 worth, advancing thereon $600. Prices continued to appreciate, when the holders reported an offer at 45 cents, and asked permission to sell. In reply they were instructed to hold of $6,000 the other day by his valet, and for 50 cents. The market soon weakened, the exchequer of royalty seriously diminishhowever, when the consignor wrote to have ed thereby. the merchant let his hops go at 45 cents, but he was informed that 40 cents only now could be obtained—a figure which he could not think of.

Finally, the market steadily declining the owner was willing to accept 40 cents, but by this time 35 was the best offer. The ably absent the other Sunday. He was in owner was again obstinate, and refused to Paris, where he rode one of the horses for Ever since then the market has been five cents below his views, until this week his consignment, not considered longer worth storage, was given away to one of the gardeners outside the city, to be used for manure. And this is not a solitary instance in the hop trade the past season.

Women never think of committing the purchase of their dry goods, dresses, cloaks. bonnets, or even the material for children' clothes, to Bridget; they would not even trust the judgment of the merchant; they insist upon seeing colors, selecting patterns, and judging of texture for themselves. Why are they not equally interested in the proper selection and purchase of food? Clothing is, to be sure, displayed upon the body, but food enters directly into its composition; and that the kind and quality exercise an almost incalculable influence upon its formation, and also upon the mind and character, a very little reflection will will be a credit to that city. suffice to show. A temperate, healthy, well-digested diet promotes beauty; it produces clearness of complexion, regulates or gantic action, and preserves freshness, vigor and elasticity till late in life.—Jennie June.

CONCENTRATED LEMONADE.

667THIS PREPARATION OF LEMON RE-L tains in great perfection the natural flavor of the fresh fruit together with its agreeable acidity. The facility with which a Glass of Lemonade may at any time be made with it, equaling any that can be made with the fruit in its natural state, recommends it to every household and gives it an especial value to travelers
