Blaine's Game.

Against Blaine's infamous organization of political passion upon cumulative falsehood, the most venomous diatribe becomes a solemn anathema to drive him beyond the pale of diguity and morality. Holding in his hand the book which disproved his statements, he used only selected passages, which, garbled to suit his vile pu: pose, could not be recognized as part of the volume, if put back as he had altered them. He drew a blood-curdling picture of the crimes of Torquemada, who murdered a hundred thousand men, women and children, and boasted that he had actually executed twenty thousand; and then Bisine solemnly declares, calling heaven to witness, that all this did not compare with "the crime of Andersonville."

According to accepted testimony the "horrors" of Northern prisons must have exceeded those of the South m, for the proportion of deaths was great-

According to the official report of Surgeon General Barnes there were 220,000 Confederate prisoners in the Northern prisons, and 270,000 Federal prisoners n the South. According to the report of Secretary Stanton, 22,576 of the Federal prisoners died in the South, and 26,435 of the Confederate prisoners died in the North. These facts show that the horrors of the Northern prisons, if not so harped on by politicians, were more fatal than the horrors of the Southern prisons, since of the 220,000 Confederates 26,000 in round numbers died, while of the larger number, 270 00) Federals in the South, only 22,000 in round numbers died-that is, more than twelve per cent. of the Southerners died, and less than nine per cent. of the Southerners the Northerners.

In investigating this subject Blaine must have seen the published state. ments of the Confederate commissioner of exchange of prisoners; and whoever has done so must lay all the "norrors' of Audersonville on General Grant, who refused to exchange prisoners.

A portrait of Ralph Wallo Emerson ist be printed as the frontispiece of the "Midwinter" (Feb.) SCRIBNER, which will also contain a descriptive and biographical paper on the poet's "haunts and homes," by F. B. BAN-BORN. This portrait has been drawn from life by M. . WYATT EATON, and has been engraved by Mr. Cole, by whom were drawn and engraved the frontispieces of Lincoln, Bryant and Longfellow. Mr. Eaton is said to have portrayed the colmness and spirituality of Mr. Emerson's face with singular lidelity.
