A Horrible Accident.

[From the New Nort Fernid]
The unfinished portion of the Hudson River Tunnel, which was in process of construction between Jersey City and New York, caved in at about half-past four o'clock on the 21st inst. while twenty eight men were at work inside. Of these twenty were killed almost instantly, and their bodies now he buried under thirty feet of mud and tide water. Eight men effected a narrow escape.

The story of the secident itself is simple and short. The method of construction of the tunnel is told in detail elsewhere. It is enough to say here that the entrance to the tunnel proper is through a circular perpendicular shaft thirty feet in diameter, and about sixty feet deep. This is a working shaft, the bottom of which is used for the reception of waste matter, as it is excavated, and before it is taken away. Thirty feet below the surface of the ground is an "air lock," which is the sole means of comcharman of the Appropriations committee in Congress, and without the support of himself and followers to make a first committee no money of himself and followers to one for the Hillsboro District, and a the air inside the tunnel sufficiently one at either end of this lock, only one of which can be opened at once, while the lock itself is fifteen feet c. Woodland stood by the inner door of fron town, a noose was put around the air lock calling too his men to come his neck and the rope was put around to the casson. His quick order to neck and the rope was thrown work had conwork had come to late, and he called the retreat as promptly as he had or the crowd then quietly dispersed, dered the advance. "Quick, boys, leaving the body hauging. Diggs get into the lock," he shouted, and made a full confession to the sheriff instead of passing in among the first he stood by the door helping one after another in.

Eight men passed. They were not yet safe. If the others could get in an inner door of the lock could be prevailed this afternoon Mrs. Lumsden ened against them. They could not open this door nor could they break it from the inside. But in the lock were two dead lights of massive glass,

"My God! the water is gaining on said one; "what shall we do? "Keep cool, men; keep cool," ans-wered a voice from the river side of the tunnel. One of the men looked through the miner bull's-eye and saw Woodland standing quietly by the door. "Keep cool, he repeated "nothing can begained by excitement.

"But the water is gaining on us more and more, and we can't open the door into the working shaft." "Yes, and the water is covering me up," moaned poor Anderson, who was crushed by the door. "Can't you
