Ripened Wheat.

We bent to-day o'er a coffi and form, And our tears fell softly down. We looked our last on the aged face, With its lock of peace, its patient grace, And han like a silver crown.

We touched our own to the clay-rold hands, From life's long labor at rest; And among the blossoms white and sweet We noted a bunch of golden wheat Clasped close to the silent breast.

The blossoms whispered of fedeless bloom, Of the land where talls no tear; But the ripe wheat told of told on lone, the patient waiting, the frusting prayer, The antherest good of the year.

We know not what work her hands had found, What rugged place her feet;
What cross was here, what blackness of night, We saw but peace, the blossoms white, And the bunch of ripened wheat.

A friend would shake hands with him and mynire, "How is M. Malebranche "Pretty well, on the whole; but this herrid leg of mutten is getting quite imbearable by its weight and its smell." "What! This leg of mutton?" Yes. Can't you see it langing there vein of pleasuitry, "Ill guarantee and in front?" If the friend limit into a lough, or ventured to deny the existence of the strange phenomenon, Malebum-he would get angry. At length a colleague of his, a man gifted with a sense of the humorous, determined to case him by some means or other, Calling upon him one day he affected to perceive the cause of his trouble and monited about it. The imaginary nations overcome with gratifude ran to endeace this first believer, who, stopping backwards, attered a cry, "What! Have I hart you, my friend? "Certainly; you have run your leg of mutton into my eye. I really cannot understand why you have not tried to get rid of that awkward appendage long since. If you will allow me with a razor an operation performed without the slightest danger" "My friend, my friend, you will have saved my life! Old Ah! Oh!" In the twinkling of an eye the friend had shightly grazed the tip of his nose, and producing from under his coat a splen. did leg of nortton, he flourished it triumphantly in the air. "Ab," exclaimed Mal-branche, "Thye, I breathe My nose is free, my head is free!
