AUNT REBECCA'S GHOST.

"I don't believe a word of it." said Aunt Rebecca.

The wine like glow of sunset yet if lumined the great bay window; but the rest of the apartment was already shrouded in the gray shadows of twilight, in whose misty indistinctness the huge chains of carved oak looked like gigantic monsters fr in some for eign shore. From the walls trowned down dark old family pertraits, and the crimson hangings above the arched doors waved restlessly back and forth in the draughts of wind that swept through the xast corridor.

"I don't believe a word of it?" repeated Aunt Robecca, with more emphasis than before. "A ghost story, indeed?"

"Tell me about it, Violet," said young Hazlewood, to whom the deep bay-window, with its far off prospect of snowy hills, veited in gathering twifight, to say nothing of pretty Violet Orme's close vicinage, were infinitely more attractive than the more modern regions of Alnwick Place.

"It is not much of a story," said Vislet, flushing up to her very eyelishes at the sound of her own sweet voice, " only years ago, long before my great grandpa built this house, the site was all one unbroken wood, and there was a tradition that a beautiful girl was mardered by her lover. The tall, old fashioned clock in the hall was striking twelve, and the coleny of crickets under the warm hearthstone were falling into a dreamy, sleepy sort of a chirp, when Aunt Rebeeca emerged from her door, treading on tiptoe, and carrying a dim light in her hand.

Now, Aunt Rebecca, in nodding false curls, lace coiffure, and eight enyear old style of dress, was a very different sort of personage from Aunt Rebecca, with her head tied up in a silk handkerchief, her false curts laid aside, and a long white dressing-robe enveloping her lank figure; and the latter was by no means the more prepossessing of the two.

Probably some such consciousness swept across the good spinster's brain for she shulled with a celerated rap idity past the solemn eyes of the grave old family portraits on the wall.

"I am sure I dropped them some where here," she murmured, pausing in front of the bay-window, "How provoking! There goes my candle out! But I Teneve I can find them however, the starlight is so bright. Mercy up or us! what is that? The
