FOR THE FARM AND HOME.

Apples Every Season.

Two seasons are required to produce a crop of apples; that is, during one season the fruit buds are developed, and during the next the fruit. All the vital energies of some trees are employed during one season, to develop the fruit buds; then the year following, their entire vitality seems to be spent in developing the fruit, without sufficient force being left to form fruit buds for the crop of the next season. Now, in order to induce an apple tree to bear every season, climb into the top, or go up on ladders, just as one does when plucking the ripe fruit, and with a pair of sharp shears clip off the young fruit from about half the tree. Then fruit buds will form on that side of the tree from which the young apples were cut off. One half the top, then, will bear fruit one year, while the other half will yield fruit the next season.—American Garden.

Ground Food While in Pasture.

"Does it pay to feed cows ground food while in pasture?" is a question that is being agitated among dairymen nowadays, and about which a variety of opinion is expressed. While it is a fact that, taken alone, there is no better food for a cow than good pasture, yet the experience of many dairymen throughout the country is in favor of quite a liberal feeding with corn meal and bran even while the cow is on the best of pasture and apparently doing well.

The American Dairyman, in commenting on the above, explains that the grass furnishes the finest of flavors and all the mineral elements, but the meal gives butter qualities to an astonishing degree, so much so that old dairymen who have had the nerve to give it a full and fair trial have stuck to the practice, even when butter was selling at very low rates. This journal also cautions feeders that there is a right way and a wrong way to feed meal. A wrong way is to begin the experiment by giving them at once a very large feed of meal, which disarranges the stomach and stops the flow of milk. The cow ought to be gradually accustomed to the meal by increasing the ration day by day until the stomach becomes accustomed to it. In this way one can find out when the maximum point is reached of feeding meal for profit. "When the increase of butter ceases," says the authority in question, "the increase in meal should stop and usually it would be well to decrease the feed a little until the exact point of profit is determined."

When to Prune Trees.

Mr. Barry says: "If a tree is severely pruned immediately after it has put forth its leaves, it receives such a check as to be unable to produce a vigorous growth the same season. Young trees may be cut back to a single bud in early spring, and the new shoot will push forward with increased vigor. But cut back in a similar manner in time or during the growing season, its growth for the remainder of the season will be feeble; it has been shorn of its foliage and time alone can restore its wonted vigor."

Mr. Downing says: "Ignorant cultivators frequently weaken the energies of young trees, and cause them to grow with lean and slender stems, by injudiciously trimming off the young side-shoots and leaves in the growing season. By taking off these shoots, the stem is deprived of all the leaves which would attract and elaborate the sap, thus preparing nourishment for the growth of the stem. And the trunk of the tree does not increase in size half so fast as when the side branches are allowed to remain for a time, pruning them away gradually."

If pruning during the growing season tends to check wood growth, and of the truth of this there can be no doubt, what are the lessons taught us by these facts? One thing is very certain, we can hasten or increase the productiveness of our orchards by summer pruning, as whatever tends to check wood develops fruit buds and brings trees sooner in bearing; on the contrary, if our orchards are over-productive and a better tree growth is desirable, avoid pruning in summer. It is far better to prune in early spring.—Cultivator.

Plant Food and Stimulants.

The common idea of a stimulant is that it is something that has no nutritive quality, but which excites the system to activity at the expense of its reserved vitality. A reaction always follows it, and leaves the man or animal minus just so much vital force as has been brought into abnormal action by the stimulant. If a man is weak from hunger and a dose of brandy is given, the system is "braced up," as we say, for a time only: increased exhaustion follows. But if a quantity of quickly digested food as a nutritious soup, is taken, the system is not only braced up but actually strengthened, because nutriment is given which at once replaces the exhausted force and matter of the blood and muscles, and so repairs and builds up. This difference is very easily understood. Now there is a very common impression among farmers—which is unhappily cultivated by some writers—that artificial fertilizers are all stimulants and are not plant food. This is a very great mistake. Plants will not take stimulants. They will not take in any nutritive elements in excess of their requirements. If we use salt or plaster or phosphates and find that the crop is benefited, the truth is that the soil was deficient in the elements contained in these substances, chlorine or soda, sulphuric acid or lime, or phosphoric acid, and because of the absence of these necessary elements plants cannot take in any other food which they need. Plants must have a complete food supplying every necessity or they will either refuse to grow or only grow in a stunted condition. It is therefore quite wrong to consider any special fertilizer which may be found to help the growth of a crop as a stimulant, because it is really plant food and necessary nutriment, which not only adds to the substance of the plant itself, but enables it to appropriate a large amount of other food from the soil which it otherwise could not do because of its own weakness and the incompleteness of the food.—New York Times.

Roup in Fowls.

Roup is to fowls what heavy colds are to human individuals, and as we have cold in the head, cold in the bowels, sore throat, and other disturbances from cold, the term "roup" covers them all. Roup in some forms is contagious, while in other shapes it may exist in a flock without affecting any but weak constitutions. The first thing to do with the affected fowl is to clean out the nostrils, and every feeder should have on hand a small syringe which should be put to use early. Roup when malignant, makes known its presence by a peculiar disagreeable odor. The sick fowl looks droopy, and a slight pressure on the nostrils causes a discharge which is very offensive in smell. Make a solution of copperas water, and with a syringe inject some of it into the nostrils, and also down the throat. If the birds is no better in a few hours try a severer remedy, which is the injection of a mixture of coal oil and carbolic acid. Add ten drops of carbolic acid to a tablespoonful of coal oil, and force a small quantity into each nostril. This will cure when all other remedies fail. Night and morning give pills or powders either in food or by forcing it down the throat. Add some also to the food of those that are well.

How to make roup pills or what most persons desire to know. The basis of all roup pills or powders is asafetida. This is combined with tonics and cathartics. Here is the method, and to which a small quantity may be mixed at a small cost. Take one teaspoonful each of the use of iron, red pepper, ginger, saltpeter, tincture of potash, salt and powdered chalk; mix them intimately. After thoroughly mixing, add three tablespoonfuls of hyposulphite of soda and mix well together. Incorporate this with one ounce of asafetida, working it together until the whole is completely mingled, occasionally sprinkling it when necessary, with castor oil. This can be made into pills, or when dry into a powder. If out of the same composition as many of the roup pills which are sold at fifty cents a box.—Poultry Keeper.

Household Hints.

Never use water from a stone-less cistern for cooking purposes.

Never use water which has stood in a leaden pipe over night. Not less than a wooden bucketful should be allowed to run before any taken for use.

The suggestion that sage tea applied to the scalp will prevent the hair from falling out is an old one; all the same it is a good one. A convenient plan is to steam the tea and add bay rum in the proportion of one-third rum to two-thirds tea. The rum keeps the liquid from spoiling in warm weather.

Recipes.

Rye Drop Cakes.—One pint of sour or buttermilk, three eggs, one small teaspoonful of soda, a little salt, and rye meal to make a stiff batter.

Codfish, Cuban style.—One small dry fish cut in pieces. Fry one onion, cut fine, in a spoonful lard; when brown add half can tomatoes. Put in the fish with water enough to cover it. Cook about an hour; serve on toast.

Beef Steak.—The best way to cook a steak is to broil it over moderately hot coals, turning often. But this method has its disadvantages. It causes much smoke, which, if there is no smoke-escape over the range, fills the kitchen and finds its way to the dining room, besides investing the cook with an aroma suggestive of a ham just from the smoke house. If the cook happens also to be the "lady of the house," the family will be quite contented with a steak cooked as follows. Have the gridiron hot. Grease the bottom, but leave no surplus fat. Put in the steak, and as soon as it is brown turn it. Keep turning it every minute or two till the outside is cooked. This will keep in the juices. Then cover it and let it cook for about three minutes. Turn it and cook it for three minutes more. If it is not a very thick steak, it will be done sufficiently by this time for those who like a rare-done steak. If it is turned often at first, and cooked just long enough, it cannot be distinguished from a broiled steak.—Good Housekeeper.

CLIPPINGS FOR THE CURIOUS.

A strawberry nine inches in circumference has been produced in Washington territory.

Four thousand persons are annually buried in "Potter's field" of New York city.

A male catamount, or cougar, has a body four to four and one-half feet long, the female being somewhat smaller.

Slavery is spoken of in French annals up to the twelfth century, but no traces appear in the thirteenth, as many of the laws prove.

The first indication of the insanity of George III. of England, appeared on the day of the completion of the fiftieth year of his reign, October 25, 1810.

In the largest library in the world, in Paris, there is a Chinese chart of the heavens made about 600 years before Christ. In this chart 1464 stars are found to be correctly inserted, as corroborated by the scientists of the present day.

The son of a Scotch millionaire, who has become greatly interested in agriculture, has hired himself to an Illinois farmer for $15 a month so as to learn the American methods of farming. He agrees to labor two years at that rate of pay.

There is an old colored preacher in Eufaula, Col., who is 106 years of age. He has been married nine times, his ninth wife being now alive, and he claims to have had 127 children. He owns twenty acres of land, which he cultivates during the week, preaching on Sundays.

Two full grown robins were seen recently near Monticello, Ind., one of which appeared to be helpless and the other protecting and consoling it. The well bird frequently went on expeditions to the back yards of the neighborhood and brought choice morsels of food to its sick companion. The latter was caught by a boy and found to be totally blind.

Several centuries ago the Chinese destroyed their great forests. Abbe David, the French naturalist, now expresses the belief that they did this to rid themselves of tigers, leopards and other formidable beasts. Ancient forests exist in China only among the mountain ranges, and the plains are so completely cultivated that native plants are seldom found.

A Latin historian says: One has seen fathers authorized by law to drag their children from the tribune, while they were addressing the people, in order to punish them at their discretion. They were dragged across the public square and the executioner led them. The consul, the tribune of the people—in time the people itself, proud of its power and force, who came to applaud them, were obliged to keep silent, and respect in the latters an authority which the law gave them.

Advice to Young Married People.

"Drive gently over the stones." This piece of advice, which is frequently given to inexperienced whips, may be respectfully suggested to the newly married. There are stony places on the road to happiness, which if not carefully driven over, may upset the domestic coach. The first rock ahead which should be marked "dangerous" is the first year of married life. Here especially is the first step that costs, as a rule, the first year either nurse or makes a marriage. During this period errors may be committed which will cast a shadow over every year that follows. On awakening suddenly or in sleep we feel put out and rather cross. May not the young husband and wife experience feelings not entirely different when they awake to reality from the dreams of courtship and the fascination of the honeymoon? Everything must once more be contemplated after the ordinary manner of the world, once more with subdued feelings spoken of, considered and settled. For the first time husband and wife see each other as they actually are. Each brings certain peculiarities into the married state to which the other has to grow accustomed. They have now to live no longer for themselves, but for each other, and the lesson is not learned in a moment. In all things indifferent the husband and wife must be willing to yield, however now it may be to them, however different from what they themselves thought. Self must be sacrificed in order thereby to gain the help of another beloved existence. A lady once asked Dr. Johnson how in his dictionary he came to define pastern the knee of a horse; he immediately answered "Ignorance, madam, pure ignorance." This is the simple explanation of many an accident that takes place at the commencement of the matrimonial journey. The young couple have not yet learned the dangerous places of the road, and, as a consequence, they drive carelessly over them.—The Queen.

A Reason Against Romeo.

Arrangements were being made for an amateur representation of "Romeo and Juliet." Mrs. S was cast for "Juliet," but some difficulty was had in finding a suitable "Romeo."

"Why don't you play 'Romeo' yourself, Mr. S?" suggested one of the young ladies. "You would do it splendidly, I am sure."

"What!" he exclaimed, "with Mrs. S as 'Juliet?' Why, we've been married three years."

Strange Scenes on a Mountain.

Within the compass of what was once, no doubt, a crater of Mount Lesson, California, there are boiling bodies of water of dimensions from sixty feet by forty to those small as imaginable, some clear as crystal, others white with sulphur, alum, soda and salt. While some are gently simmering, others boil furiously. In close proximity are other springs, the contents of which are a composition of minerals and earth of all consistencies, from huge cauldrons, which reminds one of great kettles of boiling soap, to others like large churns of cream, so thick as to be agitated with much difficulty, and one that afforded considerable amusement was so tiny that it was much like the size and shape of the spout of a teapot, and emptied at intervals of several seconds about one teaspoonful with great force to a distance of several feet.

On two different peaks substance is brought up from the depths below, dries on the surface, floats to the margin, and is piled up in huge quantities resembling lampblack. A visitor says a handful to be thrown into a current floats away bodily without dissolving. The surrounding embankment seems to be of chalk like formation, and from every aperture as small as a mouse hole to the immense one whose force cannot be estimated, superheated steam, the condensation, steam is emitted with great or less rapidity, the noise of the larger exceeding that of any steam engine. On lifting a crust anywhere, the surface beneath, as well as the aperture, was found to be crystalized with sulphur. Formations of crystals of the different minerals are found promiscuously. Above one of these seeming escape valves are large rocks, which are completely encrusted with sulphur crystals. As if to heighten these wonders of nature, not two steps from a body of water by a large bank of snow, the greater part of which consisted of that very curious phenomenon red snow, so much so that our fingers were stained as with dye in compressing a ball of it.

A Peculiar Case.

In an insane asylum in New York a comfortable looking lady of fine appearance, who in her own right is worth four or five millions, and whose connections are a synonym of wealth and social position, excites interest in the form of her hands, that are continually covered with pebbled gloves, lest in some of her spells she should tear or bruise them, as frequently understood to do. For days at a time she is strapped to the bed in which she insists on the chair in which she insists to sit, to prevent her from taking her own life. The family do not wish to record a suicide in the family Bible, and three relays of attendants watch the fair young maid never leaving her alone. No royal mad monarch ever been better cared for than this unfortunate girl, who is every attempt with is studied and watched, and who has all the comforts of her own home, from which she was removed a few years ago and placed in the asylum to be under the doctor's care.

Her case is a peculiar one. She has been unsettled in her mind since childhood. Idiosyncrasies increased with the growth of years, and while still in short dresses she was pronounced to be an enigma of mind and ultimately insane. She has completely lost her identity, and imagines herself to be a cat, and is incessantly endeavoring to catch herself and those about her, yet the sight of a feline will cause her the most abject terror, even the picture of one at will alarm her. Unconsciously she is acquired feline intonations and movements, and will mew rather than talk.

She is improving under the doctor's care, and the entertains some hope of restoring her by the treatment he is pursuing, but so far as the family or those else is concerned she is dead, and poor lily the generation of to-day does not know of her existence. The case has been presented to the most eminent specialists of the day, but none of them, except the one now in charge of the case, has been able to effect any alleviation in the patient's case. In this asylum she goes under a fictitious name, embracing, however, the two syllables of her own patronymic.

A Flowery Name.

An Austin colored man, Jim Webster by name, of rather limited education, and whose memory is remarkably defective, was recently blessed with a son. His wife, who is more intelligent, determined that the son and heir should have a high sounding name, and selected a very beautiful one. When the child was presented to the clergyman for baptism the latter said:

"Name this infant."

Jim scratched his head for a while and finally said,

"Squash."

"Dat's not a proper name for a nice Christian child."

"Sun Flower, den."

Once more the clergyman shook his head incredulously. Jim Webster leaned over and whispered to his wife to give the right name.

"Hyacinth," she replied.

"Well, I knowed it was some kinder garden truck."

A Gander Guide.

In Germany, an aged blind woman used to be led to church every Sunday by a gander. He would take her to the door of the pew where she sat. As soon as she was in her place he would walk quietly out of the church, and occupy himself in the churchyard, feeding on the grass till the service was over and he heard the people coming out of church. Then he would go to the pew of his old mistress and lead her home again. One day the minister of the church called to see this person at her own house. He found that she had gone out, and he expressed his surprise to her daughter that they should let her go out alone.

"Oh, sir," replied the daughter, "there is nothing to fear. Mother is not alone; the gander is with her."

Brought Home in a Wagon.

Louisville, Ky.—Mr. J. Helmus, Vice President of the City Brewery, was brought home in a wagon, carried up stairs by two of his men and laid on the bed. He was suffering with a severe attack of rheumatism contracted in the ice vaults of the brewery. He refused to have a doctor, but dispatched a servant for a bottle of St. Jacobs Oil, with the result that in one week he was entirely cured and able to return to his desk.

Men who pry into to things—burglars.

Everybody's Air-Brake.

"Yes, sah," said Uncle Zach, "I've watched it forty years an' it as I see: De day of May an' Christmas day of de same year allers comes on de same week day."

Further conversation proved Uncle Zach a most interesting person. Changing to motion De Carver's feat of breaking glass balls with a rifle, he said:

"I heerd 'bout dat shootin' an I knowed right off it wasn't squar'; dat was a Yankee trick, boss, she's you born."

"What was the trick?"

"Dar was lookin-glasses put into de glass balls, an' like wise into de bullets; so when de ball let fly outen de gun, it an' de ball as' drawed together, which, in course, broke de glass—hits de trick."

Later, Uncle Zach observed a rope running along the side of the car.

"Boss, what's dat line for?"

"To apply the air brake in case of accident." Then we had further to explain how the force of the brake was obtained, to which Uncle Zach responded:

"Look a here, boss, you shuly don't 'spect me to b'leve dat foolishness? Why, de biggest hurricane whatever blowed couldn't stop dis train, runnin' forty mile a hour. An' you think I gwine to b'leve a little piece full of wind under de kyars can do it? No, sah-ree!"

There are a great many Uncle Zachs who judge everything simply by appearances. The air brake does not seem to be a very powerful thing, but prescribed influences are not necessarily equivalent to big ones and pipes.

Phillip Beers, Esq., who resides at the United States hotel, New York city, and is engaged in raising subscriptions for the New York World Ruth fund, was once approached by a distinguished receiver who was a physician, for securing much subscription terms, a remedy that cured him of Bright's disease eight years ago. He said: "Sir, for the medical profession with all its power and experience of thousands of years, anything that can cure this terrible disorder? No, no, that is true, there is no such thing about it but that Warner's safe cure is really a wonderful effective preparation. That reminds me to say that every man, no matter, and the first explains ways he received so many hundreds of thousands of dollars."—Copyrighted. Used by permission of American Press Bureau.

Where Money Reigns Supreme.

In New York, and I suppose in all large cities, but there especially, money has become only the fashion. They have hundreds of millionaires and thousand upon thousand of very rich men. Speculative opportunities afforded by the war were availed of by unscrupulous men, who to-day live upon their ill gotten gains. We are on the second edge of population. Speculators put into the pocket of one million and have taken from the pockets of the greedy millions. A new set have come to the front socially and financially. They are vulgar, common rude, offensive. They boast of their wealth, they flaunt in the eyes of the public their new purchases; they give balls and entertainments to which gentlemen with whom they are unacquainted are invited. They send lists of guests to the new papers; they furnish, in addition to this description of elegant toilets worn by the ladies at these entertainments, they inform society reporters of all the details of expenditure, they tell how much they spend for flowers, what the cost of the dinner or supper is to be. They parade before the reporters their gold and silver service, and are particular that they get it all set correctly. They appear upon the streets in the morning with diamonds in their ears, with costly ornaments upon their necks, and inexpensive bracelets upon their arms, if they be women, with diamond collar buttons and diamond sets, and heavy gold chains and solitaire diamond rings upon their fingers, if they are men. They are loud in their dashes in dress, and flourish in manner. All this, vulgar and low bred as it is, is not bad, it is simply disagreeable, and, doubtless, as time rolls on, social friction will rub off the roughness, and when the fourth generation appears by which time, however, the money will double the present manhood and womanhood will have their turn. The beer-going voter to the home life of these creatures. In their public and in their amusement taste I find the Romans and the nigger dives to which I earlier referred.

has been a laborious and costly work, but the end justifies the effort. Obstruction in any important channel means disaster. Obstructions in the organs of the human body bring inevitable disease. They must be cleared away, or physical wreck will follow. Keep the liver in order, and the pure blood course through the body, conveying health, strength and life, let it become disordered and the channels are clogged with impurities, which result in disease and death. No other medicine equals Dr. Pierce's "Golden Medical Discovery" for acting upon the liver and purifying the blood.

Adepts.

In killing poultry the French are adepts, as they are in everything appertaining to the cuisine. They open the beak of the fowl, and with a sharp-pointed and narrow-bladed knife, make an incision just at the back of the roof of the mouth, which divides the vertebræ and causes instant death. The fowl is then hung up by the legs to bleed. This is a neat and quick process, and is a decided improvement over the usual clumsy method generally practised in this country.

Quaker Testimony.

Mrs. A. M. Dunphin, a Quaker lady, of Philadelphia, has done a great deal to make known to ladies there the great value of Mrs. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound as a cure for their troubles and diseases. She writes as follows: "A young lady of this city while bathing some years ago was thrown violently against the life line and the injuries received resulted in an ovarian tumor which grew and enlarged until death seemed certain. Her physicians finally advised her to try Mrs. Pinkham's Compound. She did so and in a short time the tumor was dissolved or caused to slough off, and she is now in perfect health. I also know of many cases where the medicine has been of great value in preventing miscarriage and alleviating the pains and dangers of childbirth. Philadelphia ladies appreciate the worth of this medicine and its great value.
