It was more than a week later. A heavy fall of snow, such as we rarely get so late in February, made all the world white. I stood at the window of my own little sitting room, benning against the heavy, deep-red curtains, and booking out at those whirfing non-closs flakes. But at the library door my strength returned. I walked in Ruyyenham stood before the fire, my grandfather near the window Mother lay on the softs. Aunt Rose being seated by her.

"I am glast to see you see such better, my precious," said my grandfather, in a tone that shook slightly. "Territle timestate that shook slightly, "Territle times and first I have to ask your pardon, my dearest grandpap, for all the trouble I have brought on you without meaning it."

"I think you have suffered more than I my poor lated picture of the girl," he said, said;

machinery that presses instead of liammers. We began to get a larger glimpse of the machinery-like precision of the works, and from what we say minutes. For instance, we went over to where a big machine was deliting holes round the edges of some large slabs of metal. The slabs measured a dozen feet each way and were all linch thick, yet the drills went through several of them superimposed as though they were so much felt.

While we looked, a traveling crancame rapidly up the side and stoppe by the machine. Two dat books, like those used to lift barrels came down from above. A workingman caught one on the obsert a metal sheet which had been drawn from the machine He dexterously threw the other back across to the opposite side of the sheet into the air and carried it swit ly down the shop perhaps a hundred feet to where a collect machine was working. One can of the sheet was dropped into the colling machine which bit it as between feeth. The crane hooks alloped off and the sheet heavy to this in the same of the sheet began to alide in between the rolls. There was a heavy grinding sound and then we could see the alies coming up from the rolls. It was longer flat but curved into a great tube. Workmen slipped it out of the end of the rolling machine, and an other crane came along picked if an and started away with it. We follower after - Frank Leelie's Popular Month
