Prosperity

Well painted barns and sheds give a look of prosperity. Of greater importance than "looks" however, is the protection against loss from decay and deterioration.

Lucas Barn Paint

is a high-quality, non-fading paint,

QUERY DEPARTMENT. Answers by John

Is there any danger of a person 80 years old dying with tuberculosis?
Mrs. G., Moncure, N. C.
Well, there might be, if the person contracted with the disease in their youth.

Is baseball a dangerous game for boys to play? "Mother," Apex, N.C.
Ans.—No. Sometimes the batter lets the bat loose and strikes a player on the head and kills him. Otherwise it is a safe game.

Is it wrong to make whiskey?
C. C. R., Bennett, N. C.
If the officers get you, it's wrong.
If they do not get you and you make good whiskey, a lot of people will glory in your spunk.

I am nearly bald, can you tell me what will remedy the matter? John Z., Pittsboro, N. C.
Ans.—Tell me what kind of wife you have, John, then I will know more about your case.

Which is the proper way to eat your food? Answer and settle a question. Johnnie, Goldston, N. C.
Ans.—I eat immaterial, Johnnie.
Some people eat with their fork, some with a knife and fork. That's fashionable. Some use their hands. That's damnable. Mostly hoboos eat that way.

Which is the most safest way to travel? I am thinking of going on a long journey from home and can go either by water or rail. Miss P. X.
Bynum, N. C.

Ans.—I'll have to quote you what the old darkey said: "If you are riding on the train and have a wreck, dar you is; but if you are on a boat and the biler blows up, whar am you?"

Cough.—Boil one ounce of flaxseed in a pint of water, strain, and add a little honey, one ounce of rock candy and the juice of three lemons. Mix and boil well. Drink as hot as possible.

WOMAN CAN BE CHARMING.

She who would charm must develop in herself a power of self-control that is strong enough to rise to selfeffacement when necessary, says an exchange. And, having done so, she can start to play her part of a charming woman with fair prospects of success. She effects an entire subordination of her personality to the personalities of others. It is by making others conscious of themselves, of their own importance and value, that she gets the truest recognition from them of that individuality that she has been careful not to obtrude. She conveys by subtle signs, her steady sympathy with and her understanding of their complex natures, and gives them the definite impression that they themselves are entirely pleasing to her.

If she can do this and at the same time refrain from obtruding her point of view, and more especially, her own claims to be understood, flattered and liked, she not only wins the reward of popularity, but adds to the substantial worth to her character.

Instead of trying to impress others with the consciousness of how much she knows, she impresses them with their own possibilities. Instead of trying to dazzle with conversational display of wit and epigram, she uses her skill to turn the conversation into channels in which her companions can swim at ease, keeping it by deft ease, from drifting into pools of inconvenient depth.

ent depth. She need express no views but she must give attention to the views expressed by others. She need say little, but she must listen well.
Her reputation for cleverness will not suffer.

It is as pleasant to recognize by word or look the graces and charms of our friends as it is to enjoy and profit by them. Profit we do undoubtedly, since all that makes existence fairer, makes it better, and a wholesome discernment of lovely traits, whether physical, mental, spiritual, adds to our faith in humanity.

A genuine compliment is a sincere recognition of some excellence in our friend, expressed in gracious, tasteful words. Yet there are implied compliments, which indirectly, but not less surely, carry pleasant messages. The warm welcome, the radiant smile of approval, say more than words can convey, and are just as significant as mathematical exactness of phrase. The compliment of listening with a responsive, silent attention is one of the surest marks of appreciation, and the pretty way of quoting the opinions or appealing to the judgment and taste of our friends is a mode of offering delightful incense.
