THE STATE FAIR AND FLOWERS.

Raleigh, Oct. 2.—Flowers of many varieties will be exhibited at the North Carolina State Fair by the florists of the State during the week of October 15-20, but one of the most interesting exhibits will be the one that Mrs. Edith Vanderbilt, president of the State Fair, has provided in the way of natural flowers.

Mrs. Vanderbilt is strong for flowers and her estate at Biltmore has a world of them, but when she took charge of the State Fair two years ago the grounds were barren of anything that even smacked of beauty. Today it is very different. Zenias of all grades and varieties have been planted around Floral Hall, the central building at the State Fair grounds, and they have been pruned down with a view to having them in full bloom when the fair comes on. They will provide a wealth of color.

There is a world of dahlias, too, which will be blooming at fair time in all their myriad colors while in front of the buildings will be flower beds with the stately cannas in bright red and yellow to furnish a mellow setting for the scarlet sage and the unique dusty miller, which is used to produce the white to offset the brighter colors.

In planting these flowers a color scheme has been observed with a view to showing how flowers can be used to make beautiful premises, so that those visiting the fair can learn something about how to make their home yards attractive. At least that is the idea of Mrs. Vanderbilt, who wants to see North Carolina a place of beauty as well as of enterprise and industry.

POWER OF THE COUNTRY PRESS

Alamance Observer.

The "home" newspaper is looked to in many a community as the mentor and guide when the time comes to make an important decision. The editor of the country paper, usually unassuming, is a leader in shaping the decisions of his townspeople in those progressive undertakings which affect the common welfare. No matter if the people of the rural sections are coming more and more to look to the city papers for their news of world happenings—they still depend for friendly counsel and advice upon the judgment of someone within their own communities, who has proven himself dependable and wise.

These are most momentous times in all history. Old nations and systems are passing, and new nations, new systems, are taking their places in the world's work-shop and business. Under the law of progress and evolution greater changes are to follow. The great mass of mankind in our country as well as in Europe is moving along, slowly but surely, toward the goal which seemed to be envisaged and expressed by our revolutionary fathers.

From every town in this nation comes the demand for reliable, unprejudiced information on national and international affairs, but with almost every nation in the world maintaining information bureaus in this country, added to the class propaganda that finds its way through the publicity associations for the free use of the press, the country editor, as well as his city brother has a difficult task in selecting the wheat from the chaff. Nevertheless natural American common sense, education and existing facts are difficult things to permanently suppress and the time comes sooner or later when the power of the country press comes into its own. It cannot be lightly or slightly regarded by those in power.

A Bad Break

A budding soprano, making her first appearance, started her song, "I will hang my harp on a willow tree—" Each time her voice breaking on a high note.

All at once a voice from the balcony said: "Better hang 'er up on a lower branch, Liz!"

So far as prices are concerned, we may as well prepare ourselves for a late fall.—New York Evening Mail.

DID YOU?

Did you ever watch the camp fire When the wood has fallen low;
And the ashes start to whiten
Round the embers' crimson glow;
With the night sounds all around you
Making silence doubly sweet;
And a full moon high above you
That the spell may be complete?
Tell me, were you ever nearer
To the land of heart's desire,
Than when you sat there thinking
With your feet before the fire?
