

DEATH OF MRS. FANNIE DARK.
 Mrs. Fannie Dark, wife of Mr. John Dark, died at the home of Mr. Thos. Green, a few miles southwest of Pittsboro last week and was buried at the Green Chapel Methodist church cemetery last Friday, where the burial services were conducted by the pastor, Mr. J. J. Boone.
 Mrs. Dark was in her 76th year. This was a sad death, but the good woman was relieved from a long siege of suffering. She had been an invalid for several years.
 She leaves a husband who is totally blind.
 Card of Thanks.
 We wish to thank our neighbors and friends for the many kind deeds shown us during the sickness and death of our little girl. May God's richest blessings rest upon them.
 Mr. and Mrs. J. D. MOORE.

While shaving a customer the other day, he asked if we used the same kind of soap that other barbers used. "No," we replied, "Does it burn your face?" "No," he said, "it tastes different."
 Well, it's true old bar soap and obsolete articles are not known in this shop. For real service, prompt and accurate attention see us. You're next!

Mr. Brown remarked that once he knew an old lady to take five pounds of boiled rice to a pounding of a preacher. She boiled the rice, she said, to enlarge her symptoms of charity and also to make her gift look more formidable and prominent.
 "No one seems to know," said the visitor, "just why they go to these putting out, announcement, debuts, socials or donation events and he was reminded of old Col. Buchgrass, a Southern statesman who was once sent to Congress and on his arrival in Washington he was asked who sent him there. Well, he said, I have been here long enough to see how the laws are made and get a few details and when I left home I surely believed that my constituents sent me, but since I have learned as much as I have durned if I don't believe the devil sent me."
 "The intentions of all of them are good," said Charley Brown, "but the result is doubtful."
 "Yes," said the visitor, "It reminds me of a Woman's Club up in Raleigh where I have been living so long, they sent motto cards to the different members of the senate at Washington to their year and on which were inscribed such legends as 'Will you enjoy the horrors of hell as much as you have enjoyed the fleshpots of monopoly?' 'Where do you expect to spend eternity?' It did them a whole lot of good in sending but the benefit was all on their side. The senators didn't notice the excellent job of printing and designing on the cards.
 There was a long silence. "Did you ever notice," said Charley Brown, "that when a lot of people get together and try to be a whole lot better than they feel, a painful silence swoops down on them occasionally."
 "Yes," said the visitor, "just like a buzzard swooping down to enjoy the dead silence and environment surrounding the resting place of a dead calf out behind the clump of cedar trees on a sold December day."
 "Well," said Mr. Brown, "this announcing an engagement of a young lady steen weeks before the marriage at some party specially designed to meet the occasion with monogram cards, a rose bud, a petal from a peablossom or some folded enigma that has to be explained to be understood, what is your opinion as to that?"
 "Reminds me of when Mrs. Douglass announced the engagement of Rebecca Folsom," said the visitor, "She was engaged to marry Ebenezer Longfellow and all thought it a shame as Eb was an old widower. One old lady, however, replied that a woman had only two chances, they must either marry a widower or marry a bachelor—a man who had never been married or one who had. Then one of those painful silences you spoke about fell upon the parlor."
 "Same thing in regard to these newly-weds," continued the visitor. "It is painful to endure the necessary evils following a wedding of socially inclined folks. They must call all the town together occasionally and have it clearly known that they are really married and show them that everybody is in accord with their decision and the happy event is wholesomely approved."
 "Stoo bad that times change but men and principles never."
IN MEMORY OF GRANDMOTHER.
 Dear grandmother from us has gone to be with us no more here, in this old world. O, how we miss her dear face; there is no one that can fill her place. It seems that life is not to me just what it ought to be since God has taken grandma away.
 Her greatest desire was to be true to her God and to help somebody along life's pathway. She longed to see her grand children become noble men and women, and if I could only live to be the man she would have had me to be, I would feel that life would be worth while.
 I so often think of the happy moments she and I have spent together, and how she told me of God and His love for me. Now her dear room has no charms for me, because she is not there to speak a kind word or give me a sweet smile or tell me good night. Long years will not cause me to forget her sweet face. I still count as purest and best of all the women I have ever, my grand mother. Her purity was as a flaming fire. I can still feel the smoothing touch of her loving hand. The whole world is in need of grand mothers like her. Every noble impulse of life awakens in me at the thought of her. I can find no words that would express the appreciation of such a friend. I hope some day to meet her in a happier, sweeter home.
