A-PITTSBORO

Now, who knows what became of the rest of the Brantlys? Governor Aycock's middle name was Brantly. Wonder if he is derived from the Brantly family on one side of the house? Who ever heard of the Warden family? Is there any place in Pittsboro that can be located as the home of the gentleman who did much to give to the first half of the nineteenth century one of its great scholars, ministers, and teachers? The court house records will probably show the location of the Brantly lands, if they owned any, also the location of the Warden home.

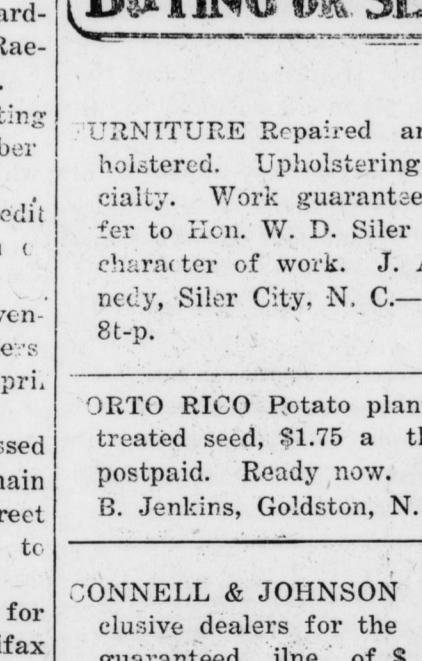

Since writing the above, we have looked up the Brantly family in the census reports of 1790, and find that the name was numerous and the families with only one exception possessing slaves. If Wm. T. Brantly's father was as poor as the sketch by his son, reprinted in Purefoy's history, indicates, he would be the son of Wm. Brantley, as one Wm. Brantley is listed as having one son in 1790 and he under 16 years of age. Wm. T. born in 1787, would have been there in 1790.

Since writing the foregoing, we have looked up the Brantlys in the Census report for 1790 and find that there were six Brantley families at that time, two whose heads were named William, two Johns, one Mary, and Joseph. All owned slaves except one of the Williams. One of the Johns had three boys and five slaves; Joseph had four boys and 12 slaves; one of the Williams had one boy and no slave; the other John had two boys and eight slaves; Mary had one boy and ten slaves; the other William had three boys and ten slaves.

The first named William was probably the father of Wm. T., for if his family was as poor as the sketch written by Dr. Wm. T. Brantly's own son indicated, he would hardly have been a slave holder. And it was the slave holder, we believe, who was the preacher, since Purefoy lists him as "of D. R.", probably signifying that the preacher lived on Deep River, which would have put him too far away for the boy Wm. T., if his son, to be so well known at Pittsboro. There is no Blake Brantly mentioned in the census, and he was probably one of the boys mentioned in the several groups.

The Brantly family, with five out of six families owning a goodly number of slaves, was evidently not among the "poor white trash" crowd, even if Wm. T.'s father was too poor to educate his son. The census doesn't show any Wm. Warden in Chatham in 1790, but there was such a man in Stokes. He may have moved to Pittsboro, but it is more probable the benefactor of young Brantly had more recently come from Scotland.

REGARDING KNOWLEDGE

(Continued from page 1) that a school can do for a man is to teach him how to think. It isn't what you get out of a book, but what it puts out of you, that makes a man.

A man is like a well. There is a lot of him if he can only get it out. Sometimes a book, or a conversation, or a course of instruction, acts on him like priming on a pump—it brings out of him what is in him. And that is all that education means.
