Mr. Frost Changes Mary's Mind

Mary's mother had told her that she could not get out to play in the garden because Mr. Jack Frost might bite her, so she had to be contented and play in the walk. As she started out to play one morning she saw Mr. Frost with his pale white face sitting on the rose bush.

"Please, Mr. Frost, why do you come around and bite everything you see and make it die? I think you are the most horrid person in the world for destroying the things in my garden. You even kill my zenias and make the other flowers hang their heads in mourning. Surely no one could be more cruel than to go into a garden and kill one's best loved flowers."

"My little maid, I don't think you understand my work. I came when you were in your little bed asleep, went in your flower garden and tinged its plants with silver. Certainly you haven't seen how beautiful everything is."

"Mr. Frost," said Mary, "you are right for my flowers are very beautiful, but I can't ever get out to enjoy them since you leave so early."

"Well, sometimes the most pleasant hours are the shortest ones, so you must come out early each morning and I will be here with my paint and brush to make your garden pretty. I have one enemy that I always run from and I will have to do my work before he gets up."

"Please tell me who your enemy is, Mr. Frost."

"My enemy is Mr. Sun, the ruler of the weather." As Mr. Frost spoke Mr. Sun slowly peeped up his big yellow head and ran Mr. Frost away, but each morning Mr. Frost always went back to add a touch of beauty to Mary's flower garden.

Dinner was served at 2 o'clock. All enjoyed themselves. There was abundance for all. Mr. Chambers received a number of appropriate presents. He returned to Asheboro with Mr. and Mrs. Vulcanannon for a short visit.

Mr. Vulcanannon had the misfortune of tearing the motor of his car up while en route from Asheboro. This occurred about eight miles from Pittsboro.

Apex Rt. 3. V. C.

James J. Riordan, New York banker, and close personal friend of Al Smith and Franklin Roosevelt, was found dead in his bed room last Saturday with a pistol nearby. Police say it was suicide. Mr. Riordan has been active in support of former Governor Smith, both in state and national affairs, and was associated with him in a number of business deals. Directors of the bank are having a complete check-up of the books made. Heavy losses in the recent stock market debacle might have caused the act.
