Ten of the 12 children born to Mr. and Mrs. Williams survive. They are Rev. R. Murphy Williams, of Greensboro; Mrs. W. S. J. Thomson, of Houston, Tex.; Mrs. J. F. Cobb, Berkeley, Cal.; Mrs. C. A. Jackson, Eastman, Ga.; Mrs. J. R. Potter, Mrs. George R. Ward and Mrs. Henry Vann, all of Wallace; C. J. Williams, Jr., Jacksonville, Fla.; P. M. Williams, North Wilkesboro, and J. A. Williams, of San Francisco, Cal. Mr. Williams is also survived by a large number of grandchildren and great-grandchildren.

As a young man Mr. Williams attended Lovejoy school in Raleigh, but his stay there was ended when he answered the call to arms sounded by the Confederacy. When Fort Fisher fell in February, 1865, he was serving as a lieutenant with the southern forces there.

Mr. Williams was an active and vigorous man throughout his life, and was a great sportsman, his greatest delight being an exciting fox hunt. From early childhood he rode after the hounds, and until his death he kept his faithful horse and a pack of dogs which he cared for himself. The state meeting of the fox hunters association held at Greensboro about two years ago was attended by Mr. Williams.

Throughout his life Mr. Williams was a man independent in his thinking and endowed with firm conviction. His mind was keenly alert to all that was happening in the world about him, and this was true up until the time of his unexpected death Thursday, it was said.

Characteristic of Mr. Williams was an incident that is said to have occurred only a few days before his death. He learned that there was available the fur of a recently killed bear and he told his son-in-law, Mr. Vann, that he wanted the skin. In response to a question as to his reason for such a request Mr. Williams said that he would rather have the hide over his grave than a blanket of flowers.

Just a few days before his death, after he had sensed that the doctors were not optimistic over his condition, Mr. Williams jocularly remarked, "well, since the doctors can't pull me out, I guess I'll have to swear out a habes corpus."

The death of Mr. Williams removed his last surviving member of a very large family, prominently connected with the early history of the state. Mr. Williams was a son of John A. Williams and Miss Emaline Harrison, who was a relative of Judge Archibald D. Murphy, well known figure in North Carolina history.

Mr. Williams was greatly beloved throughout this state and in many parts of the nation.
