Clinic For Pre-School Children Being Held

(Continued from page one) his schooling may be interrupted by illness and not infrequently such children have to repeat the first grade. This is very discouraging to the child, and often leads him to believe that he is different from other children because he cannot keep up with them. On the other hand, if a child enters school in good condition and free from defects, he has a much better chance for normal progress and for happiness in his contacts with other children.

"Children grow very rapidly during the first six years of life, and during this rapid growth, physical defects are apt to develop which may cause permanent damage if they are not corrected early. For this reason it is wise to have children examined by the family physician at least once a year. This examination should be followed by early correction of physical defects. It is especially important that children who are entering school for the first time be examined and the defects corrected as far as possible. The most frequent defects among children are dental, poor nutrition, diseased or enlarged tonsils or adenoids, and poor posture. Poor vision or hearing, defects of heart and lungs, and other conditions are not quite as frequent.

"Defects of the teeth often have a very serious effect on the health. Not only do they interfere with the appetite and digestion and therefore with nutrition, but infection may extend to the tonsils, to the glands of the neck, to the ears, or to distant parts of the body. Therefore, the habit of visiting the dentist regularly should be formed early in life, and defects corrected before they can do serious harm.

"Diseased tonsils likewise may not only cause harm in themselves but the infection may spread from the tonsils to other parts of the body such as the ears, sinuses, glands, joints and heart. Parents should therefore take very serious notice of any advice from their physician as to the need of removal of diseased tonsils.

"Enlarged adenoids likewise interfere with normal breathing and if not corrected result in imperfect development of the upper jaw. Children with enlarged adenoids are as a rule unusually susceptible to colds and other infections of the nose, throat and lungs. Removal of enlarged adenoids is a very simple process.

"Poor nutrition among pre-school children is most often the result of poor health habits, such as insufficient rest, irregular meals or unbalanced diet, or it may be the result of conditions such as diseased tonsils or defective teeth. This condition should be discovered and the cause removed, whatever it be. Only a careful examination by a physician can determine what abnormal condition is interfering with the nutrition of the child.

"Acute illness often delays progress in school. This is particularly true of the acute infectious diseases such as measles, diphtheria, and scarlet fever. Removal of physical defects often increases resistance to infection, but every child should be given the preventive treatments which are available. No child should enter school without being successfully vaccinated against smallpox and immunized against diphtheria."

Mellon Has Nothing to Say Pittsburgh, April 20.—Andrew W. Mellon said tonight he prefers to make no comment on America's leaving the gold standard, or on projects to expand currency and credit.

"This is a very complex question," said the former secretary of the treasury, one of the world's richest men. "I could not comment without making a very thorough study of the issues involved and I am so engaged at this time that I cannot give the time for such a study."

Russell Mull, of Morganton, raised 1,000 baby chicks with a home-made brick brooder and had them ready for market as broilers at ten weeks of age.

CAUDILL, INFANT IS CLAIMED BY DEATH

A Question Asked And Answered

Is it better to use newspaper advertising when business is dull or when it is bad?

Advertising experts advance the practical theory that the merchant or business man gets more for his advertising dollar by using newspaper space when business is dull. It is the logical time to attract customers with outstanding values.

This is the logical time to advertise.
